EDZELL,

WITH THE PARISHES OF LETHNOT-NAVAR, LOCHLEE, AND STRACATHRO.

EDZELL is a large parish and village, the latter 6 miles N. from Brechin, its post town. The parish is situated chiefly in this county, with a small portion in Kincardineshire. It is 14 miles in length, and forms the north-east point of the county; the lower part is bounded by Stracathro, the middle by Lethnot, and Navar on the west; and that part in Kincardineshire by Fettercairn on the east; the upper or water-side by Loches on the west, and on the north by Stracathro in Kincardineshire, and Birse in Aberdeenshire. The village is neat and well built, having two main streets with several others diverging therefrom, situate on the banks of the North Esk, and is well supplied with gas by a company who have their works at the south side of the village. The ruins of the ancient castle of Edzell is the chief object of interest, and is considered one of the finest ruins of the kind in Scotland. It was formerly the residence of the Lindsays of Glen Esk. The North Esk on the east, and the West Water on the west, are the only streams which flow through the parish, which is very healthy. The scenery around is of a very beautiful description, and much resorted to by summer visitors. The Grampian Hills, running east and west, are in the immediate neighbourhood. One mile north of the village, where the North Esk takes its course, a most striking and imposing sight presents itself. The scenery here is truly magnificent, the river forming in some parts cascades or waterfalls. There is a parish church and also a Free church in the village, and a school. There are two first-class hotels in the village, provided with every accommodation for visitors. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in February, first Monday in May, fourth Friday in July, fourth Wednesday in August, and in October for cattle and sheep. The parish embraces an area of 20,068 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 823, and in 1891, 745.

LETHNOT-NAVAR, a joint parish 4½ miles W. from Edzell, and 8 N. from Brechin (its post town), is 15 miles in length and about 7 in breadth, having Edzell on the east, Monmuir on the south, Loches on the north, Monmuir Fearn, Tannadice, and Clova on the west, and Stracathro on the south-east. The stream called the West Water runs through the middle of the parish, or between Lethnot proper and Navar. The hills in the parish form part of the Grampian range. There is a parish church and school. Acreage, 26,290. Population in 1881, 268; and in 1891, 239.

LOCHLEE is a parish 12 miles N.W. from Edzell, and 18 N.W. from Brechin (its post town). It is about 18 miles in length, by about 8 in breadth, and bounded on the north by the parishes of Birse, Aboyno and Glenmuick in Aberdeenshire, on the west by Cortachy and Clova, on the south by Lethnot and Navar, and on the east by Edzell. It is situated among the Grampians, a mountainous and bleak district, chiefly adapted for pasture, and bordering on the counties of Kincardine and Aberdeen. Some of the eminences of this district vary from 2,000 to 4,000 feet above the sea level. The soil is light, and the crops not very remunerative. Here is some of the finest scenery in Scotland. The parish receives its name through the Loch so named. The principal streams which rise and traverse the parish are the Lee, Mark, and the Tarff, tributaries of the North Esk, which enters the sea near Montrose. At INVERMARK is the shooting lodge of Lord Hindlip. The parish church is at the west end of the parish, and there are likewise an Episcopal church and a parochial school. This district was once the property of the Lindsays of Glen Esk, but now Lord Dalhousie is sole proprietor. Acreage, 58,982. Population in 1881, 569, and in 1891, 343.

STRACATHRO, anciently written Strickathro, is a parish about 7 miles long and 2 broad, bounded on the north-east by Fettercairn, on the north and north-west by Edzell; on the west by Monmuir; on the east by Marykirk; on the south by Brechin; on the south-east by Dun and Logie Pert, and contains the small village of INCUBARE, situated two miles from Edzell. Corn and black cattle are the principal products. The churchyard, which is about 4 miles N. from Brechin (its post town), is said to have been the scene of the surrender of the crown of Scotland by John Balliol to Edward I., in 1296. In the same cemetery are three tombstones, said by tradition to mark the graves of three Danish generals. In the north-western part of the parish rises the conspicuous hill of Lundie. There is a parish church and a school. Acreage of the parish, 5,239. Population in 1881, 467, and in 1891, 605.

TO BRECHIN, Henry Johnston, from Edzell, daily

FORFAR,

WITH THE PARISHES OF INVERARITY, KINNETTLES AND RESCOBIE.

FORFAR is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town, and the capital of the parish of its name; 57 miles N. from Edinburgh, 15 N.W. from Arbroath, 15 N. by E. from Dundee, 13 S.W. from Brechin, and 5 E. by N. from Glamis; situate in the lowest part of a country sloping towards it on all sides; and on the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway, on which line there is a station adjacent to the town. The branch line from Forfar to Dundee is also in the vicinity of the town. Forfar is of pleasant appearance, though strict regularity has by no means been observed in the formation of the streets, but these have latterly been much improved, and now contain many well-built houses and handsome shops. A large number of beautiful suburban villas have been built to the south and west of the town. Some years since were erected in Castle street, at the general expense of the shire, a handsome suite of County buildings. The Town House, which was re-built previously, besides the requisite offices, contains a spacious upper room for public meetings and amusements. The inhabitants support an excellently-conducted newsroom and library, the latter comprising upwards of 8,000 volumes. The original charters which constitute Forfar a royal burgh are lost, but the privileges were confirmed in 1669, in virtue of which the burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, and eleven councillors, a third of whom are elected annually. A sheriff's court is held for the trial of civil and criminal cases generally; and a police court for the determination of local, civil, and police affairs. The burgh unites with Montrose, Brechin, Inverbervie and Arbroath in sending one member to Parliament; the present representative is John S. Will, Esq. q.c. The revenue of the burgh, arising from lands, customs, &c., may be averaged at about £2,000 per annum. The chief trade of the town and of its vicinity is the weaving of osenaburghs and other coarse linens. There are now power-loom factories and bleachworks in full operation, employing about 3,000 hands. There are several respectable hotels, the principal being the County and Commercial, the Royal, Castle street, and the Station, opposite the Railway station. There are six banking establishments, viz., branches respectively of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Co. Bank, and the Bank of Scotland; there is likewise the Forfar Savings Bank. Few towns have improved more of late than Forfar. The new County buildings, near the Railway station, and a public hall, the free gift of Mr. Peter Reid, in the same neighbourhood, add much to the appearance of the north side of the town. At KINGSMUIR, in this parish, is a station on the Dundee and Forfar direct line of the Caledonian Railway Company.

The places of worship are two churches under the Establishment, two Free, an Episcopal, a Congregational, a United Presbyterian, a Baptist, and a Roman Catholic chapel. In the steeple of the parish church is a very fine bell, presented to the town in the seventeenth century by a native named Strang, who is said to have been brought up from the parish funds; but having gone to Stockholm, amassed a large fortune, and took this manner of showing his gratitude, besides bequeathing a large sum of money for behoof of the poor of the town. There are also a Poorhouse and an Infirmary for the accommodation of the town and the neighbouring parish; the former contains eighty-five beds and the latter forty. There are several public and private schools. The Forfar Academy, an excellent institution, now divided into higher and lower schools, commenced its instructive course in 1815, and comprises the usual routine of a liberal education. In 1850 a public cemetery was formed; it occupies nine Scotch acres on the south side of the town, and is laid out in tasteful walks, with ornamental shrubs, &c., forming a pleasant promenade. On a mound at the top of the cemetery, which occupies one of those gently sloping hills for which this part of the country is so noted, a fine monument was erected in 1852, by public subscription, to the memory of Sir Robert Peel. The figure stands upon the centre of a large pedestal, covered by a dome, which is supported on eight pillars. From its site the town and surrounding district may be seen to great advantage, while the monument is observable on its elevated position at a considerable distance. In 1881 a first-class supply of gravitation water was introduced into the town from the Den of Ogil. On the west side of the town is a fine loch, nearly a mile in length by half a mile in breadth; it is a beautiful sheet of water, abounding with pike, perch, and trout. Upon a small artificial island, near the north end of the loch, anciently stood a nunnery, founded by Queen Margaret, as a separate establishment from her husband Malcolm. At the partial drainage of the lake, many years since, for the purpose of obtaining its fertilising marl, some weapons and instruments were found at the bottom; these were conjectured to have been the implements used by the murderers of Malcolm II. at Glamis, on the ground of a tradition which asserts that the assassins, in attempting to cross the lake on the ice, went down and perished. The date of the erection of Forfar Castle, which stood upon an eminence to the north of the town, cannot be certified, but it is said to have been the place of meeting of the first Parliament, convened by King Malcolm Canmore, and his occasional seat of residence after the recovery of his throne from Macbeth. The magistrates of the burgh some years since removed the market cross from the street to the site of the old castle, to mark the spot where that monarch sojourned, as but few remains of the edifice are now extant. The Rev. John Bruce, the author of the "Statistical Account of the Parish of Forfar," furnishes a number of particulars illustrative of the rise of the town, its tastes and appearances. He says that about the middle of the last century there were not above seven tea-kettles, seven pairs of bellows, and as many watches in Forfar; "now" (1798) he adds, "every house in town has a tea-kettle and bellows, and every menial servant must have his watch." At the same not distant period, an ox, valued at forty shillings, supplied the flesh market of Forfar for a fortnight. The steady advancement of population, trade, and agricultural improvements, both before and since 1798, when this gentleman wrote, have in this district as elsewhere, revolutionised the prices and consumption of articles, and now Forfar is one of the most thriving and comfortable towns in the county. The market is held on Saturday, for butter and grain, and cattle markets are held every Monday, at the Auction Mart adjoining the railway station. A fair is held on North Moor for horses and cattle on the second Wednesday in each month from April to November. The parish of Forfar, which embraces an area of 8,853 acres, in 1881 had a population of 14,470; and the burgh 13,579; in 1891 the town contained 13,665 inhabitants.

INVERARITY is a parish about 3 miles square, bounded on the north by the parish of Forfar, its post town, 4 miles S.E. therefrom; on the south by Monikie and Murroes; on the east by Guthrie and Dunnichen, and on the west by Kinnettles, Tealing, and Glamis. Freestone and grey slate abound in the parish; the soil is various. The parish church is conveniently situated. There is also a public school. The turnpike from Forfar to Dundee passes through the parish, which embraces an area of 9,588 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 862, and in 1891, 769.

KINNETTLES, a parish said to have derived its name from the Gaelic word signifying the "head of a bog," is about 2 miles in length, with an equal breadth, 3 miles S.W. from Forfar, its post town, and 2 E. from Glamis. Although the parish cannot boast of any river, yet it is beautifully diversified, having a large rivulet called the Kirbet, which at KIRKTON is crossed by a chain bridge, and a stone bridge of three arches at DOUGLASTOWN (these places are small villages in the parish). This stream after a circuitous course of 72 miles, and 10 miles southward of its source, finally joins the Tay. The land is fertile, and beneath the surface an abundance of sandstone, whinstone, and slate abounds. The parish church was built in 1812. There is now a good parish school built at Douglastown, to replace the old one at Kinnettles. Acreage, 2,860. Population of parish in 1881, 536, and in 1891, 540.

RESCOBIE is a parish about 3 miles N.E. from Forfar, its post town, and is about 6 miles in length and from 1 to 2½ in breadth, situated between the hills of Dunnichen and Turin. It is bounded by Forfar on the west, Aberlemno, Guthrie, and Kirkden on the east, Kirkton, Dunnichen, and Forfar on the south, and Aberlemno on the north. The soil is various and mostly in cultivation, with some thriving plantations, and very little waste ground. It has no river or considerable stream, but it is sufficiently watered for domestic and agricultural purposes, and is intersected by the loch of Rescobie, which is more than a mile in length. From the loch of Belgavies, in the parish of Aberlemno, on the north and east of Rescobie, issues the chief branch of the Lunan waters, which gives name to a bay in the German Ocean, into which it falls about 12 miles from Rescobie. These lakes abound with marl, a manure which is very good if skilfully used. Stone quarries of various qualities are wrought in this and adjoining parishes, great quantities being conveyed to distant parts by rail from Auldbar Road station, which is situated on the borders of Alerlemno, and the centre of a district famous for its excellent quality of stone. There are a parish church and school, the latter containing a very good and extensive library for the use of the inhabitants. Acreage, 6,563. Population of parish in 1881, 685, and in 1891, 660.

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARMYLLIE, GUTHRIE, KINNELL, AND KIRKDEN.

FRIOCKHEIM is a modern village, in the parish of Kirkden, 6 miles N. from Arbroath, its post town, situate on the north bank of the Lunan, and near the line of the Dundee, Arbroath, and Forfar section of the Caledonian Railway. It owes its origin to Mr. Anderson, who laid out the ground on a regular plan, and feued it into small lots. The chief trade consists in flax and jute spinning, and there are several pavement quarries in the neighbourhood. Altogether the situation of this place is peculiarly eligible for the seat of manufactures, being nearly equidistant from most of the towns in the county, and in the immediate vicinity of a railway. In 1885 upwards of £700 was collected by public subscription, and the proceeds applied to the erection of a handsome chapel, in connection with the Established Church. It also contains a Free church, and an Independent chapel. There is no municipal government, the hitherto exemplary conduct and contented habits of the inhabitants rendering such description of superintendence unnecessary. Population in 1881, 1,098, and in 1891, 943.

GUTHRIE parish is divided into two parts, lying nearly six miles asunder, the nearest portion being about a mile and a half from Frickheim. It is a junction on the Dundee, Arbroath, and Forfar section of the Caledonian railway, and about 6 miles N.W. from Arbroath, its post town. The land slopes from the hill of Guthrie to the south and south-east, a part only being arable. Prior to the Reformation this parish had a collegiate church, with provost and three prebendaries. The patronage of the parish belongs to the family of Guthrie, one of whom was slain at the battle of Flodden. The entire parish contains 3,823 acres, and in 1881 possessed a population of 439, and in 1891, 433.

KINNELL parish, one mile from Frickheim, lies on the north side of the Lunan. The church stands on the bank of the river, at the distance of 6 miles N.W. from Arbroath, its post town, and about 4 miles W. from Inverkeilor. The parish extends about four miles in length by three in breadth, embraces an area of 6,577 statute acres, and is separated from the sea by Lunan parish. It is bounded on the north by the parishes of Farnell and Maryton, on the east by those of Craig, Lunan and Inverkeilor, on the south by the latter, and on the west by those of Kirkden, Guthrie, and Aberlemno. The surface of this district is mostly flat, and in a good state of cultivation; and there are some plantations in a thriving condition. Within the parish are several tumuli; and tradition points out the spot where a battle was fought between the rival clans of Lindsay and Ogilvie in the year 1443. Population in 1881, 696, and in 1891, 643.

KIRKDEN is a parish between six and seven miles long and two broad, comprising an area of 4,999 statute acres, situated seven miles N.W. from Arbroath, bounded on the north by Rescobie and Guthrie, on the south by Carmyllie, on the east by Kinnell and Inverkeilor, and by Dunnichen on the west, and is watered by the Lunan and the Vinny, one of its tributaries. A small patch of Dunnichen parish lies in the western division of Kirkden, which latter is tolerably fertile, and the lands well enclosed and planted. In this district are some remains of antiquity, including an obelisk bearing some rude characters, the meaning of which cannot now be deciphered. The village of Frickheim is in this parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,682, and in 1891, 1,488.

CARMYLLIE is a parish six miles in length by three in breadth, and bounded by parts of eight parishes, viz. Panbride, Monikie, Guthrie, Dunnichen, Kirkden, Inverkeilor, St. Vigeans, and Arbirlot. The village of Carmyllie is about 5 miles S. from Frickheim. The parish is hilly, and contains much land that is unproductive; but there are considerable quarries, from which good pavement stones are obtained, and exported in great quantities. The small river Elliott runs through the whole length of the parish, which contains an area of 7,553 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,137, and in 1891, 1,023.

GLAMIS,

WITH THE JOINT PARISH OF EASSIE AND NEVAY.

GLAMIS (formerly Glamis) is a rich and fertile parish five miles in length by one mile in breadth, bounded on the south by Tealing, Auchterhouse and Newtyle, on the west by Eassie and Nevay, on the north by Airlie and Kirriemuir, and on the east by Forfar and Kinnell. The village, a small one, is 12 miles N. from Dundee, 12 N.E. from Coupar-Angus, 5 W. from Forfar, and the same distance S. from Kirriemuir; situated in the vale of Strathmore, which is watered by the river Dean, and is one of the best enclosed, drained, and farmed districts in Scotland. The principal object of interest in this district is Glamis Castle, which stands in a park near the village. This is an edifice of princely and antique appearance, consisting of an irregular congregation of tall towers, some of which are of remoter date than others. It was anciently a royal residence, and the scene of the death of Malcolm II., in 1034; it afterwards became the property of Macbeth, after whose death it fell to the crown. Robert II. gave it to John Lyon, his favourite, who on marrying the king's second daughter, became the founder of the present noble family of Strathmore; and the eldest son of the earl bears the title of Lord Glamis. On the conviction and execution of the young and beautiful Lady Glamis for witchcraft, in 1597, the castle once more became royal property, and was a residence of James V., but was afterwards restored to the family. It contains a valuable collection of pictures. Near the castle stands a remarkable curiosity, namely, a great number of dials, thus disposed—on a pedestal stand the figures of four lions rampant, life size, each holding a dial in their fore paws, facing the cardinal points. From their heads rise a huge mass of stone, something like a pineapple in shape, with the protuberances upon it formed into dials, making the number of these ancient timepieces eighty-four. The castle, with its historical associations; the pedestal, and Malcolm's gravestone—a huge stone of rude design, standing in the garden of the manse—form the chief attraction to tourists in the county of Forfar. There is a society of Freemasons established here, who hold their meetings in a neat building erected for the purpose, and which is also used for lectures and other purposes. CHARLESTON is a small village in the parish. Charleston and Glen Ogilvie abound with very valuable stone. The station at Glamis is situated about a mile and a half from the village, and is on the Perth and Aberdeen section of the Caledonian Railway. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in April, first Wednesday in May, first Wednesday after the 26th of May, first Saturday after the 28th of October, and first Wednesday after the 22nd of November. Acreage, 14,347. In 1881 the parish had a population of 1,631, and in 1891, 1,464.

EASSIE and NEVAY is a joint parish 8 miles W. from Glamis, 7 W.S.W. from Forfar, and 7 S.W. from Kirriemuir, about 4 miles in length and 8 in breadth, bounded on the east and south by Glamis, the small river Dean forming the northern boundary. The land to some extent is quite flat, much of which affords excellent pasturage for sheep and cattle. The Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway passes through the parish, joining the Dundee and Coupar-Angus line about a mile north of Newtyle. The parish church, a neat building, was erected in 1839. In the old manse stands a portion of an old Roman Catholic church, the graveyard adjoining being very remarkable on account of its gravestones being engraved in old Roman letters. Acreage, 5,053. Population of the joint parish in 1881, 561, and in 1891, 550.

INVERKEILOR,

WITH THE PARISH AND VILLAGES OF LUNAN, ETHIEHAVEN, LEYSMILL, AND CHAPELTON.

INVERKEILOR parish presents a front of five miles to the sea at Lunan Bay, near which, on an eminence at the mouth of the Lunan river, stands a venerable ruin, called "Red Castle," said to have been built by William the Lion, and used by him as a hunting seat. The parish is of oblong form, extending west about 9 miles, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ at its greatest breadth. The church stands about on the Lunan Water, at the distance of $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Arbroath, and 7 s. from Montrose. The Keilor rivulet runs through the parish to the sea, and the small fishing village of ETHIEHAVEN is situated at the mouth of that river. LEYSMILL and CHAPELTON are also small villages in the parish. There are an Established church and a Free church, the latter erected in the year 1843. The parish contains two schools, in which are taught the ordinary branches of education. In this locality are several fine seats, particularly Ethie House, the seat of the Earl of Northesk, and reputed to have at one time been the residence of Cardinal Beaton. About a mile from Ethie House, eastward, near the sea, stand the remains of St. Murdoch's chapel, formerly a cell of Aberbrothock; and a short way to the south is the promontory of Redhead. The ridge of the coast at this point is very rocky and precipitous, about 200 feet above the sea level, and continues gradually rising in a southerly direction for four miles to Dickmontlaw Hill, in the adjoining parish of St. Vigeans. This parish, which comprises 616 acres, in 1881 had a population of 1,671, and in 1891, of 1,660.

LUNAN is a small parish situated about 7 miles from Arbroath, and 4 from Montrose, 2 miles in length by 2 in breadth, embracing 1,910 acres, with a population in 1891 of about 300. It is bounded on the east by the German Ocean, on the south by the Lunan Water, which divides the parish from Inverkeilor, on the west by Kinnell, and on the north by Maryton and Craig. The bay is one of the finest and most romantic in Scotland, forming a segment of about five miles, at each extremity of which there is about a mile of bold, rugged, and perpendicular rocks, rising occasionally in pyramid-shaped columns of 100 or 150 feet high. The church is situated at the south-east extremity of the parish.

POST, TELEGRAPH AND MONEY ORDER OFFICE AND SAVINGS BANK, INVERKEILOR, Mary Thomson, Post Mistress.—Delivery, 9 10 a.m.; despatches, Arbroath and the south, 12 40 p.m.; Montrose and the north, 3 43 p.m.
 Letters for Chapelton, Ethiehaven, Leysmill, and Lunan should be addressed "near ARBROATH."

NOBILITY, GENTRY, AND CLERGY.

KIRRIEMUIR,

WITH THE PARISHES OF AIRLIE, CORTACHY AND CLOVA, KINGOLDRUM, AND LINTRATHEN.

KIRRIEMUIR is a town of considerable antiquity, a burgh of barony, and capital of its parish, 62 miles N. from Edinburgh, 18 N. from Dundee, 6 W.N.W. from Forfar, and 5 N. from Glamis. The parish is divided into two considerable districts, which are separated by part of the parish of Kingoldrum, the northern part of which usually called GLENPROSEN, is chiefly pastoral; the southern being chiefly agricultural and manufacturing. The town is situated near the foot of the braes of Angus, on the south-west side of the hill, along the northern brow of a beautiful glen, through which flows the small rivulet Gairie. The prospect from the lower part of the town is bounded by the southern braes of the glen, but from the higher part almost the whole of the delightful vale of Strathmore is brought into view, displaying one of the grandest panoramic scenes it is possible to conceive. The town, the appearance of which has been much improved of late years, consists of several streets diverging from each other—fancifully described as resembling the shaft and arms of an anchor. A branch line of railway from the North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway unites it with other cities and towns, a neat and commodious station being erected at the west end of the town. For a long period Kirriemuir has been the thriving seat of considerable manufactures, comprising about twenty varieties of linen. It is celebrated for the excellent fabric of its cloth, and the ingenuity and industry of those employed in producing it. Some idea may be formed of the importance of this trade from the fact that the looms of Kirriemuir have furnished in one year upwards of one hundred thousand pieces, varying from 100 to 170 yards, giving employment to more than 2,000 weavers. The date of the barony of Kirriemuir is at present unknown, and it is only certain that the jurisdiction of its baillie once extended over a large tract of country. Lord Douglas is superior of the burgh. There is an inspector of police, and a sheriff's court is held six times a year for the recovery of small debts. The places of worship, which, with their ministers, are given on a subsequent page, comprise edifices for the Established Church, Free Church, United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and Episcopalians. There are four banking establishments, branches respectively of the British Linen Company, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland. There are several respectable hotels, including a temperance hotel. The inhabitants of this thriving little town are not more notable for their ingenious and persevering industry, than for their general intelligence and benevolence. Libraries are connected with the several religious denominations. Besides the public schools there is a seminary, erected and endowed from a bequest made in 1829 by Mr. John Webster, writer and banker, and managed by the parochial minister and his kirk session, with which there is a handsome bursary connected, educating about forty or fifty boys free. A little to the east of the town is the cemetery, situated on the sloping side of an eminence, the grounds being beautifully laid out and terraced, and command a most extensive view of the valley of Strathmore, the Sidlaw Hills, and the Grampians in the distance; all uniting to form one of the most picturesque landscapes within the compass of Scottish scenery. Three miles to the north-east, within the boundary of the parish, over the small river Carly, stands the Castle of Inverquharty, a large Gothic edifice, in a state of good preservation, and 2 miles west are the ruins of Castle Balfour, erected by Cardinal Beaton. The surface of the parish, which extends some 20 miles by 6, and embraces an area of 35,600 statute acres, is much diversified. To the east and west of the town it is almost level, but the greater proportion of the district is beautifully varied with hills and dales, rivers, woods and arable fields—some parts embellished with thriving plantations; and it is intersected by roads in all directions. The weekly market is held on Friday, and there is a monthly cattle market; and fairs on the second Wednesday after the 28th May, the 24th of July or the Wednesday after; the 19th October or the Wednesday after; the second Wednesday after the 22nd November, and on the first Friday after the 26th of May and the 22nd November. The population of the entire parish was in 1881, 6,616, and in 1891, 6,090.

AIRLIE (formerly Airly) is a parish about 6 miles west from Kirriemuir, its post town, situated in the western part of the county, on the borders of Perthshire; its length is about 6 miles, with a breadth varying from a half to 4 miles, bounded on the north by Lintrathen and Kingoldrum, on the east by Kirriemuir and Glamis, on the south by Eassie and Meigle, and on the west by Alyth and Ruthven; part of the line of boundary is formed by the river Isla and its tributaries, the Meigle and Dean. Within the parish is situated Airlie Castle, the ancient seat of the Ogilvies, earls of Airlie, and now much frequented in the summer months by visitors. Small portions only of the ancient structure are preserved, these being the front wall and turret with the arched portcullis, which are now connected with the modern mansion of Airlie. Acreage of parish, 8,928. Population in 1881, 844, and in 1891, 820.

CORTACHY and CLOVA is a joint parish about 6 miles from Kirriemuir, the post town. It is about 19 miles long and from 1 to 6 in breadth, bounded on the north by the parishes of Loches and Crathie, on the east by Tannadice and Lethnot, on the west by Crathie, and on the south by Kirriemuir, and embraces an area of 42,923 acres. Within the parish of Cortachy is Cortachy Castle, the summer residence of the Earl of Airlie, which in 1889 was partially destroyed by fire. Population in 1881, 442, and in 1891, 440.

KINGOLDRUM is a parish and small village, about 4 miles distant from Kirriemuir, its post town. The length of the parish is about 6½ miles, and its average breadth is nearly 3 miles. It is bounded by the parishes of Kirriemuir and Cortachy on the north and east, by Airlie on the south, and by Lintrathen on the west.

Catlaw, the highest hill in the parish, rises to the height of 2,264 feet above the level of the sea; from its summit one of the most extensive views in Scotland may be obtained. Acreage, 9,619. Population in 1881, 3-9, and in 1891, 380.

LINTRATHEN is a parish about 12 miles in length and 5 in breadth; it contains the hamlets of BRIDGEND and PITMUDIE. It is bounded on the south by Airlie, on the west by Glenisla, on the north by the Grampians, and on the east by Kingoldrum. The district in which the parish is situated is termed the Braes of Angus, lying between the Grampian range and the valley of Strathmore. The loch from which the town of Dundee is supplied, adjoins the village of Lintrathen at Bridgend. The streams which intersect the parish are the Melgam and the Isla, the latter dividing the parish on the west side from Glenisla, and on which there are two beautiful waterfalls, the Reeky Linn and the Slug of Achrannie, from the former of which arose the name of Lintrathen. Acreage, 22,624. Population in 1881, 641, and in 1891, 635.

LETHAM,

WITH THE PARISH OF DUNNICHEN.

LETHAM is a village situated in the north-eastern portion of the parish of Dunnichen, 6 miles E. from Forfar, its post town, and a mile and a half from AULDEAR ROAD STATION, on the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian Railway. It is a modern little place, having been erected on the estate of Mr. Dempster. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agricultural pursuits. Fairs are held on the 26th May, unless that day should fall on a Saturday, when it is held on Monday, and November 23rd. Population in 1881, 885; and in 1891, 811.

DUNNICHEN, supposed to be a corruption of Dun Achen, "the hill or foot of the valley," is a parish which extends 4 miles in length, by about 6 in breadth, bounded on the N.W. by Forfar, on the S.W. by Inverarity, on the N. by Rescolie, on the E. by Kirkden, and on the W. by Forfar. The greatest elevations are the hills of Dunnichen

800 feet, and the hill of Dumbarrow, 700 feet above the level of the sea. The medium elevation of the parish may be considered about 860 feet above the sea level, and consists of undulations or ridges, running from west to east, the greatest descent being towards Vinney Water (the only stream which runs through the parish), on the south. Sandstone and freestone abound in the parish. The and, which is nearly all arable, is tolerably fertile, having been much improved by the use of marl, artificial manures, and drainage. Acreage, 4,917. In 1881 the population of the parish was 1,422, and in 1891, 1,608.

LOCHEE,

WITH THE PARISH OF LIFF AND BENVIE, AND THE VILLAGES OF BIRKILL AND MUIRHEAD.

LOCHEE is an important and highly prosperous suburb, and forms part of the royal burgh of Dundee, its post town, in the united parish of Liff and Benvie, situated one mile and a half N.W. from Dundee. It occupies a large space, being incontinuous and dispersed, and presents the appearance of being a busy seat of manufactures. It contains several mills and factories for the spinning and manufacturing of flax, jute, &c. goods, the principal of these being the Camperdown Jute Works, belonging to Messrs. Cox Brothers, Ltd. These extensive works, which are the largest of this kind in the world, cover a space of about twenty-five acres, and give employment to about 5,000 persons in the various processes of jute spinning, dyeing, bleaching, calendering, power and hand-loom weaving in all the various fabrics, including hemp and jute carpeting and matting, jute carpet printing, and jute twine and rope spinning. These works have a tower with a splendid peal of fine-toned bells, and an excellent clock with four dials, which are illuminated at night. There is also a chimney shaft of about 800 feet in height, which receives the whole smoke from the works, and for ornamental architecture and usefulness is not surpassed. The Dundee and Newtyle branch of the Caledonian railway passes through the village, and is connected by a branch which runs into these works for the conveyance of all goods to and from them. In addition to the above the Messrs. Cox Bros. Ltd. have also large works giving employment to a good number of Europeans and natives in India, situated on the river Hooghly, at Calcutta, where the jute is selected and then packed by hydraulic presses, previous to being shipped to their works here. There are two stations conveniently situated for the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, one in the village and the other at CAMPERDOWN, about a mile north. In the immediate neighbourhood are several quarries of excellent freestone, which have been wrought for a long period. The stone from these quarries was used in the construction of the Houses of Parliament, the Dundee harbour, &c. and is sent to foreign countries. The greater part of the inhabitants are employed at the works above alluded to.

There are two Established churches, St. Luke's being the gift of Thomas H. Cox, Esq., a Free church, and a chapel each for the Episcopalians, Baptists, Roman Catholics and United Presbyterians. The latter congregation finding their place of worship too small have erected a handsome edifice at cost of upwards of £6,000. It is in the middle pointed Gothic style, and measures 71 feet by 53 feet inside, and 33 feet high. It has a gallery extending round three sides, and altogether it is seated for 1,000 persons; behind the church are class room, vestry hall, waiting room, &c. Externally the church has a fine appearance, having a large five-light window in south front, over the central doorway; while at the south-west angle is a tower and spire rising to a height of 130 feet above the ground. The tower contains a fine peal of eight bells, by Messrs. Mears & Stainbanks, of London. They were the first erected in any church in the burgh of Dundee, and were presented by Messrs. Cox Brothers, at a cost of from £400 to £500. James Maclaren, Esq., architect, Dundee, furnished the designs. There are also three public schools and a half-time Free school, the latter having been built in 1834 by Messrs. Cox Brothers, at a cost of about £2,000. Three manse houses have been erected for the ministers of the United Presbyterian and two established churches. Lochee park, another gift of Messrs. Cox Brothers, extends to 25 acres, and was presented to the town of Dundee free of cost. In it is erected a handsome lodge of two storeys, in the early English style, with tower, entrance gates and railings, and the whole park is enclosed with parapet walls and railings; besides the lodge there are two shelter sheds and lavatories. The whole cost upwards of £20,000, the park being endowed. Mr. Alexander Johnston, Dundee, was the architect. There are branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and also a Savings Bank. In 1881 Lochee contained a population of 15,000.

LIFF AND BENVIE is a united parish, the latter incorporated with the former in 1758. The district, which lies immediately west of Dundee, with a portion touching the Tay, is generally well cultivated, and beneath the surface freestone, belonging to the old red sandstone formation, is found and extensively quarried in various parts of the parish. There are within the parish the villages of LIFF, BIRKILL, MUIRHEAD and LOCHEE and part of INVERGOWRIE. The new Royal Lunatic Asylum, West Green, is situated near the western boundary of the parish. The Caledonian railway runs through the parish, and has stations at Liff, Camperdown and Lochee. The greater part of the population of this parish is included in the west of Dundee.

BIRKHEAD and MURHEAD are small villages in the united parish of Liff and Benvie, situated on the Coupar-Angus road, and distant respectively 2 and 3 miles from Lochee, and 4 and 5 from Dundee.

MENMUIR,

WITH THE PARISHES OF CARESTON AND FEARN.

MENMUIR is a parish, six and a half miles from north to south, and four and a half from east to west, and lies about 5 miles n.w. from Brechin, its post town. It is bounded on the north by Stracathro and Lethnot, on the south by Brechin and Careston, on the west by Fearn, and on the east by Brechin and Stracathro. The southern part is flat, and forms the vale of the Cruick water; to the north it is hilly and healthy. In the northern part of the parish are the Catterthuns, "with the best specimen of a hill fort in Europe." The parish, which embraces an area of 10,100 acres, in 1881 contained 755, and in 1891, 664 inhabitants.

CARESTON (or Caraldston) is a small parish 4 miles w. from Brechin, its post town, and the same distance from Tannadice, situated between the two latter, and on the north bank of the South Esk, and to the east of the Noran water, which flows through and unites in this parish, which is bounded on the north by Menmuir, on the east by Brechin, on the south by Aberlemno, and on the west by Tannadice and Fearn. The land is composed of beautiful and well cultivated braes, sloping to the south. The only object of immediate interest in the parish is the castle of Careston, erected about the year 1400, of which John Adamson, Esq., is the proprietor. It was formerly one of the residences of the Earls of Crawford. Above the mantelpiece, in what is called the old drawing room, are depicted the royal arms of Scotland, under which is an inscription one of the family having married King Robert II.'s eldest daughter.

Although it cannot boast of much ornament in its construction, yet it carries in its appearance an aspect of grandeur well suited to a baronial castle. Careston parish comprises 2,085 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 194, and in 1891, 188.

FEARN (or Fern) is a parish 7 miles w. from Brechin, its post town, and 10 n.e. from Forfar, situated at the foot of some of the Grampian hills. It is intersected by the Cruick water, and bounded on the south by that of Noran. Its form is nearly elliptic; on the south-west is the parish of Tannadice, on the north the united parish of Lethnot and Navar, and on the east Menmuir and Careston. The surface presents rich pastoral hills, and low grounds finely cultivated and enclosed, with extensive plantations of fir and other timber. Near the Noran stands the formerly celebrated Vane Castle, now a ruinous skeleton. Acreage of parish, 8,792; population in 1881, 316, and in 1891, 277.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON A BRANCH OF THE SCOTTISH NORTH-EASTERN SECTION OF THE CALEDONIAN LINE. Nearest Station is at Brechin, about 5 miles south-east from Menmuir

MONTROSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CRAIG, DUN, FERRYDEN, HILLSIDE, LOGIE-PERT, MARYTON, AND USAN.

MONTROSE is a royal burgh and seaport, the capital of the parish, and a branch station of the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway, 72 miles N.N.E. from Edinburgh, 29 N.E. from Dundee, 23 S.W. from Stonehaven, 21 E. by N. from Forfar, 18 S.W. from Bervie, 12 N. from Arbroath, and 8½ E. from Brechin. Montrose is also an intermediate station on the North British East Coast railway system, a route which considerably lessens the distance to the south. The German Ocean, the rivers North Esk and South Esk, and a large expanse of water, nine miles in circumference, and filled by the tide at high water, designated "Montrose Basin," so nearly encompass the town as to constitute its site a peninsula. It was anciently called Celurca, but the derivation of its modern appellation, Montrose, has been controverted by etymologists. Camden derives the name from the Latin Mons Rosarum, the "Mount of Roses," which is countenanced by the seal of the town bearing the ornament of roses, with the motto Mare ditat, Rosa decorat—"the sea enriches, and the rose adorns." Montrose is connected with many important events. In 980 the town was burned by the Danes, and many of its inhabitants killed. It is mentioned as the port from which Sir James Douglas embarked in 1390, with a numerous and splendid retinue, on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, carrying along with him the heart of Robert Bruce. It also frequently appears in history in connection with the wars of the Covenanters, and the Jacobite rebellions of 1715 and 1745. It is distinguished as the first place in Scotland where the Greek language was taught, and as having sent forth from its seminary the celebrated scholar Andrew Melville; it was the birth-place of the warlike Marquis of Montrose, and the house in which he was born was for some years occupied as an inn. In the same house the old Pretender spent his last night in Scotland. Part of it is still used as a private dwelling-house. This town is also celebrated as the birth-place of Joseph Hume, the distinguished statesman, who represented Montrose for a great number of years in the British Senate, and to whose memory a beautiful monument has been raised in High street; in the same street is a statue of the late Sir Robert Peel. Montrose formerly bestowed the title of duke on the chief of the Crawford family; but this having been cancelled in the reign of James IV., another title was created and bestowed on the family of Graham, who derived their title from their lands at Alt or Upper Montrose, now commonly called Old Montrose, but they do not now own a yard of land in the parish from which they take their title. This was the first port made by the French fleet in December, 1715, with the Chevalier on board; and the Prince embarked at the same place in the month of February of the following year.

The High street of Montrose is of great width, and the houses are lofty. Not only are the main streets strikingly clean, but the secondary ones are also neat. About the centre of the High street is the Town House, a neat plain building of two storeys, with an arcade below. The South Esk is crossed by a fine suspension bridge, on the site of the former wooden one. The foundation stone of the masonry was laid in September, 1828, and the bridge declared open in 1829. It was designed by Captain Brown, R.N., patentee, and finished at an expense of upwards of £20,000. It stretches across the river in a noble span—the distance between the points of suspension being 432 feet, and, with its approaches, the structure extends 800 feet. It forms a roadway of 26 feet in breadth, having a footpath on either side raised off. This structure is a great ornament to the town. Bridge street forms a very handsome approach to it. The river at the bridge is very deep, having 35 feet of water at spring tides and 20 feet at low water in ordinary tides; and during the ebb it frequently runs at the rate of six miles an hour. The harbour, formed by the river and an arm of the sea, is very commodious and a safe asylum for vessels in tempestuous weather. Two light-houses on the north bank of the South Esk guide the mariner to the entrance of the river; while a magnificent tower, called the Scurdyness, on the rock at the south entrance, is a welcome addition to the lights on the east coast. A house near the harbour lighthouses, in which the keeper resides, is provided with accommodation for the reception and recovery of persons who have suffered shipwreck; and attached to their praiseworthy establishment are two lifeboats, which have rendered very efficient services. The quays, which are all on the Montrose side of the river, are very judiciously planned, and have lately been considerably extended in the most substantial manner. There is a custom house at the port, but on account of recent changes in this department, it is now only a branch under the Dundee district. There is also a wet dock and patent slip. Two railway companies run into Montrose, having their own goods and passenger depots, viz., the Caledonian & North British. The shipping trade includes flax, corn, timber, coal, and cured fish. The principal manufactures of Montrose comprise flax and jute spinning, linen yarns, and sail cloth, but there are various other branches of trading industry, notably fish curing, carried on by Messrs. Joseph Johnston & Sons, who are also the lessees of the salmon fishings on the seaboard. The extent of the wood trade at this port deserves special mention, as it is believed to be second only to that of Greenock. It is in the hands of the old and enterprising firm of Messrs. R. Millar & Sons, who export large quantities of dressed timber to Australia, &c. A company has lately been formed for shipbuilding and engineering. There are seven branch banks and a savings bank—the latter with Government security. Several commodious inns afford the necessary accommodation to visitors, the principal being the Star and the Queen's. The Star Hotel has been long established, and in all respects affords excellent accommodation. The Queen's is also a good commercial and family hotel, centrally situated. The Downs or Links are situated between the town and the sea, and are the most extensive of any in Scotland, comprehending a circuit of several miles, finely formed by nature for the favourite and healthful Scottish game of golf and the popular game of cricket, both of which are much practised. The railway passing through the Links has a little curtailed their dimensions, but a large portion of the front Links has been tastefully laid out as public gardens with promenades, a bowling green, and fountains. Montrose has its assembly room and other places of amusement, and numerous institutions—charitable, educational, scientific and social. Two admirably conducted newspapers issue weekly from the Montrose press—the Review, Liberal, and the Standard, Conservative.

The erection of Montrose into a royal burgh has generally been referred to the year 1352, in the reign of David II., but there is good reason for believing that the first charter emanated from David I. The municipal government is vested in the provost, three magistrates, dean of guild, hospital master, treasurer, and eleven councillors. The town is protected by a body of police, under the superintendence of commissioners. A police court is held when requisite, a justice of the peace court on the first Monday in each month, and a sheriff court on the third Friday in the months of January, March, May, July, September, and November; the two last mentioned courts are for adjudicating small debt claims. The burgh is united with those of Forfar, Brechin, Arbroath, and Bervie, usually called the Montrose Barghs, in returning one member to Parliament; the present representative being John Shirress Will, q.c., London. There are two volunteer corps in Montrose, viz., artillery and rifles. The parish church is a large building, measuring 98 ft. long by 65 ft. over walls. This church has two galleries, and is capable of holding 2,500 people; the tower is lofty, surmounted by a handsome spire, reaching to a height of 220 feet, which can be seen at a considerable distance. In addition to the parish church proper, there is the neat quoad sacra, Melville parish church, three Free churches, three United Presbyterian churches, an English Episcopal, a Scotch Episcopal, and others for various denominations. The public charities of Montrose are very numerous. Among these are the ancient Hospital Fund, under the guardianship of the Town Council. The relief from this charity is distributed among about 144 persons, not paupers. The Royal Lunatic Asylum, incorporated by royal charter in 1810, the first institution of the kind in Scotland, occupies a handsome building on an elevated site at Hillside, about a mile and a half from the town, and from which there is an extensive prospect of the surrounding country; an Infirmary and Dispensary, originally incorporated with the Lunatic Asylum, is still under charge of the directors of that institution; and Dorward's House of Refuge. All these occupy capacious and ornamental structures. There are also numerous mortifications which afford assistance to the deserving poor of the town. The Academy is a handsome erection, surmounted by a neat dome; the establishment comprises a rector and six teachers in the various languages, writing and arithmetic, English grammar, &c. Many other educational establishments are supported; and the numerous societies, both religious and benevolent, maintained in the town are highly creditable to the munificence of the residents. Several libraries and reading rooms are supported, the principal being the one in a part of the Town House, reckoned to be the finest and most extensive this side the Firth of Forth. An interesting museum is maintained in a very tasteful building in Museum street. The market is held on Friday, and hiring fairs are held on the Friday after Whit-Sunday and Martinmas. The parish of Montrose encloses an area of 4,134 acres. The population of the burgh in 1871 was 15,720, and in 1881, 16,245; but in 1891 it had fallen to 14,397. On account of the great depression in local trade there has been a considerable exodus during the last five or six years.

CRAIG parish is 6 miles in length, and 2½ in its greatest breadth, bounded by Montrose on the north, on the east and south by the German Ocean and Lunan, occupying the peninsular corner of land between the sea and Montrose basin. The islet called INCHEBRAYOCK or ROSSIE ISLAND, in the neck of water connecting the basin with the sea, belongs to the parish; and there are also within its limits the two fishing villages of USAN and FERRYDEN; the latter being one of the largest and wealthiest on the east coast of Scotland, with a population of about 1,500, and owning boats and other fishing appliances to the extent of upwards of £30,000. The people are a very hardy and industrious race, and the women perform manual labour with the greatest ease. The land is generally arable, and beneath the surface nature has deposited abundance of limestone. Acreage 4,371. Population in 1881, 2,589, and in 1891, 2,482.

The parish of DUN, 4 miles in length and the same in breadth, bounded on the north by Stracathro and Logie-Pert, on the south by Maryton and Farnell, on the west by Brechin, and on the east by Montrose, lies between Montrose and Brechin, on the north bank of the South Esk. The land is generally fertile, and the surface for the most part level. In the parish is a small lake, called Dun's Dish. Near the Bridge of Dun railway station is a bridge of three arches, erected in the years 1785–7, which crosses the South Esk river, and is one of the strongest in Forfarshire. Acreage, 4,806. Population in 1881, 541, and in 1891, 552.

MARYTON (or Marytown) is a parish, its length from east to west being about a mile and a half, and from north to south about 8 miles, lying on the south side of the South Esk, and the west side of the basin of Montrose, bounded by Craig parish (before-mentioned), on the south-east, by Farnell on the west, Montrose on the north, and by the sea and the parish of Lunan on the south.

The land is arable and well-cultivated, and the parish derives considerable advantage from its proximity to the town of Montrose. Acreage of the parish, 3,562. Population in 1881, 8,9, and in 1891, 376. LOGIE-PERT, or LOGIE MONTROSE, as it was formerly called, was annexed to the parish of Pert, about the early part of 1600. It is situated about 5½ miles south-east from Montrose, extending 5 miles from east to west, and 3 from north to south; bounded on the north by the North Esk river, on the south by Dun, on the east by Montrose, and on the west by Stracathro. The parish church is situated in the centre of the parish, in which is the small village of CRAIGO, and the Caledonian railway has a station here. Acreage, 5,739 Population in 1881, 995, and in 1891, 973.

At DUBTON is the junction station for Montrose, on the Scottish North-Eastern section of the Caledonian railway.

HILLSIDE which forms a suburb and is in the parish of Montrose, about 2 miles therefrom, is tastefully laid out, and there are many very good houses occupied by retired and business people of Montrose. The North British railway has a station here, to the north of which is the lunatic asylum, previously mentioned.

NEWTYLE,

WITH THE PARISH OF KETTINS.

NEWTYLE is a parish and village—the latter situated on the road from Dundee to Meigle (in Perthshire), 11 miles N.W. from the former town, and somewhat above 2 s. from the latter. It is a station on the Dundee, Newtyle and Coupar-Angus section of the Caledonian Railway. There is also a branch line from Newtyle to Alyth Junction, and thence to Alyth. The neighbourhood is very pleasant and picturesque, and the village itself respectable. In the summer season it is a resort for visitors, especially from Dundee. It presents inducements to manufacturers from Dundee and other towns to establish works in this district, land being comparatively cheap and wages low; the locality of Newtyle is likewise considered most eligible as a depot for grain and other agricultural produce. The inhabitants of the village are occupied in agricultural pursuits. A church of the Establishment has been erected upon the site of the old one, at a cost of £3,000, and is capable of accommodating 600 worshippers. This is a handsome building in the Norman-Gothic style of architecture, with a tower 83 feet in height, containing a two-dial clock, presented by Captain D. C. Burman. The edifice was opened for public worship in 1872, Andrew Helton, Esq. of Perth, being the architect. There are also a Free church, a public school, and a public library in the village. The parish, which lies in the southwest part of the county, extends two miles in length by one and three-quarters in breadth, including a portion of the Sidlaw hills, from which the lands decline into the rich flat exposure of Strathmore. Near the village are the remains of the castle of Hatton, built by Lawrence, Lord Oliphant, in the year 1575; and contiguous to these ruins some vestiges are visible of the still more ancient castle of Balraig. This parish, which embraces an area of 5,192 acres, in 1831 contained a population of 911, and in 1891, 832.

KETTINS is a parish 4 miles S.W. from Newtyle, and 1½ S.E. from Coupar-Angus; a small portion of the parish is situated in Perth-shire, the greater part being in the western district of Forfarshire, on the southside of the valley of Strathmore, and on the northern declivity of the Sidlaw hills. The length from east to west is 5½ miles, and the breadth from north to south 3, inclusive of Baudirran, which is detached. It is delightfully situated on a little stream, which, after passing Coupar-Angus, falls into the Isla. The parish generally is tolerably fertile, and contains excellent sandstone, very durable for building purposes. The parish church, erected in 1768, anciently had six chapels dependent upon it. There is a public school in the village. The castle of Pitcur, a mile south of the church, and now in ruins, gives title to the ancient and honourable family of Hallyburton. The Caledonian railway passes through the parish, and has a station at ARDLER. Kettins parish encloses an area of 7,796 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 848, and in 1891, 827.

TANNADICE,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ABERLEMNO AND OATHLAW.

TANNADICE is a parish situated nearly in the centre of the county, extending about twelve miles in length, and by four to eight in breadth, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Forfar, its post town, and 6 W. from Brechin, separating on the east and north-east the parish of Tannadice from those of Careston, Fearn, and Naver, and the sides which contain the obtuse angle separating the parish on the S.E., S.W., and N.W. from the parishes of Aberlemno, Oathlaw, Kiriemuir, and Cortachy. Along the western border of the parish passes the South Esk river, and on the eastern side courses the Noran water; on the banks of these streams the water is finely enclosed, and exhibits a variety of romantic scenes. The village of Tannadice is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the river Esk, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Brechin. The Brechin and Forfar Railway now (1892) in course of construction runs through this parish, and a station will be erected close to the village. Acreage 21,328. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,254, and in 1891, 1,117.

ABERLEMNO parish lies on the banks of the South Esk, and about 12 miles from the sea coast; 5 miles E. from Forfar, its post town, and 6 W. from Brechin, bounded on the north by Tannadice and Careston, from which it is separated by the Esk; on the north-east and north by Brechin, on the south-east by Guthrie, and on the south and west by Rescobie. The land is undulating and fertile, and agriculture is pursued with spirit and success. There are several quarries in the parish, which give employment to many of the inhabitants, and from which are obtained good pavement stones and gray slates, large quantities being conveyed by railway from AULDEAR ROAD STATION, which is in this parish. Turin Hill, the highest elevation in the parish, is 800 feet above sea level. In the parish churchyard, which is about 6 miles S.W. from Brechin, is an antique obelisk, covered with hieroglyphics, and also a little to the north of the parish church are three antique obelisks, two of which are also covered by hieroglyphics, which are supposed to have been erected to commemorate a signal victory obtained over the Dares near this place. Antiquarians, however, are not agreed as to the design for which they were erected. A little to the eastward of the church are the ruins of the Castle of Flemington, and about 2 miles N.E. from the church are also the ruins of Melgund Castle, which is supposed to have been erected by Cardinal Beaton. The "vitified Fort of Finhaven" is about a mile west from the parish church. Acreage, 8,914. Population in 1881, 993, and in 1891, 826.

OATHLAW, or FINHAVEN, is a parish 4 miles N. from Forfar, its post town, situated on the south bank of the South Esk. Its length from east to west is about six miles, and its greatest breadth about three miles; it is bounded on the north by Tannadice, and on the east by Aberlemno, on the south by Rescobie, and on the west by Kiriemuir. The hill of Finhaven, with its "vitified fort," is about three miles from the parish church, and is about 500 feet above sea level. It has much attracted the attention of antiquarians of late, but the mode of its construction and the use for which it was designed and the era to which it belongs still remain a mystery. Situated about a mile and a half east of the church is the Castle of Finhaven, now in ruins, once the residence of the Earl of Lindsay and Crawford. There are quarries of excellent freestone in the parish. Acreage, 5,274. Population in 1881, 440, and in 1891, 399.

HADDINGTONSHIRE,

OR EAST LOTHIAN, lies in the south-eastern part of Scotland; bounded on the north by the Firth of Forth, on the east by that strait, and also by the North Sea, on the south by Berwickshire, and on the west by Edinburghshire, or Mid-Lothian. From east to west it extends twenty-six miles; from north to south, at the middle, sixteen—at the east end it is not more than ten miles across, and at the west end about twelve; its surface presents an area of about 270 square miles, or 173,298 statute acres. In extent this is the twenty-fourth, and in population the twenty-first of the counties of Scotland.

THE EARLY HISTORY of this county is so intimately connected with that of Edinburgh as to render unnecessary a lengthened recurrence to this subject. The Saxons denominated the whole country lying along the sea and the Forth Lothian; afterwards it was divided into three parts, called, from their relative situation to each other, East Lothian, Mid Lothian, and West Lothian. In 1020, this district, with other parts of the Lothians, was ceded to Malcolm II. In succeeding centuries the shire suffered the horrors of pillage and conflagration on all occasions of the armies of England being sent to invade the country, or to molest or punish the capital. In 1296, and again in 1650, the sanguinary battles of Dunbar were fought within the county; and in the critical year of 1745, it was the scene of the conflict of Prestonpans, since which period it has enjoyed almost uninterrupted repose and tranquillity.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—In point of soil, cultivation, and produce, this county holds the first rank in Scotland; and in some of these respects, particularly the mode of husbandry, it will bear comparison with the most favoured districts in England. The greatest elevations in East Lothian above the level of the sea are Traprain Law, 700 feet; North Berwick Law, 940 feet; Soutra Hill, 1,230 feet; and Spartleton Hill, 1,615 feet. During the reigns of David I., Malcolm IV., and William the Lion, the acreage of this county was in the possession of only a few barons, who at their pleasure disposed of not only the lands but the men who lived upon them without hindrance. In these times the kings, the nobles, and the churchmen were all tillers of the soil; and in this district every manor had its hamlet, its church, its mill, its kiln, and its brewhouse. The monks, indeed, were indefatigable husbandmen, and by their labour and skill gave the county its first character for agriculture. In this point of view, it may be divided into four districts. The first is a sloping tract of land, with a fertile soil. The second is a ridge of ground north of the Tyne, descending partly towards that river and partly towards the coast land, and comprehends a good proportion of the arable land of the county. The third consists of a tract varying in breadth, elevated above the midlands, and continuing along the base of the mountain, nearly the whole extent of the county. The fourth comprises an extensive range of mountains which commences at the south-west extremity of the shire, and terminates in a high promontory called St. Abb's Head; the greater part of this is moor, but some spots between the hills are kept under a regular rotation of crops. Having near two sides begirt by the sea, the county derives a great part of its beauty and opulence from this circumstance. So commodious has nature disposed the surface of East Lothian into ranges of hills and fertile dales, that some tourists, from topographical retrospection, have declared Haddingtonshire to be the Northampton of Great Britain. Excellent gardens and orchards flourished in this county as early as the twelfth century; and pulse seems to have been cultivated here in the thirteenth—the latter circumstance is attested by the fact of the English soldiers, during their siege of Dirliton Castle, having subsisted on the peas which grew in the adjacent fields. The thriving state of the agriculture of this county in the fourteenth century is noticed by Fordun. He says, in 1386, East Lothian was embroiled in warfare, and its field operations impeded by the outrage committed by Alan of Wyntoun, in carrying off by violence one of the daughters of the Earl of Seton; and, he adds, that so great was the ferment upon this occasion, that the labour of a hundred ploughs was suspended during a whole year. The fertility of East Lothian in the seventeenth century is ascertained by a passage in "Whitelock's Memoirs," where it is stated that the soldiers who accompanied Cromwell in his expedition into Scotland in 1650, were astonished to find in that district "the greatest plenty of corn they ever saw, not one of the fields being fallow." But it is since the period of the Union that in this district particularly agricultural improvements have manifested themselves extensively and beneficially, and called forth the exertions and science of spirited individuals, proprietors of the soil. They have introduced the best systems of husbandry and employed the most approved implements and machines—have drained, planted, and enclosed, until East Lothian has become one of the most beautiful and productive shires in North Britain. The manufactures of this county are unimportant, and are carried on but to a limited extent. There are two woollen mills in the neighbourhood of the county town, whilst in other parts of the shire are brick and fireclay tile works, agricultural implement works, breweries and a distillery. Salt is manufactured in the vicinity of Prestonpans, coal also being extensively wrought here and at Tranent, Ormiston, and Pencaitland. So long ago as 1200, it is said, the monks of Newbattle worked a seam of this mineral at Prestongrange. Limestone is common over the county, and clay, ironstone, and sandstone are also found. The climate in the Lowlands is on the whole genial and favourable for agriculture, whilst in the Lammermoor district it is colder and more liable to falls of rain and snow.

RIVERS, &c.—Several streams intersect the county, but none of them merit the title of river except the Tyne, which, passing Haddington, falls into the sea at Tynninghame, where it forms a bay. The shire is destitute of natural lakes, but this deficiency seems no way injurious to the district, and is amply made up by the Firth of Forth, which yields a large supply of fish. The North British Railway passes through the county, and possesses stations in all the principal towns; there are also one or two branches diverging from it.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Haddingtonshire comprises twenty-three complete parishes and two parts of parishes, and three royal burghs—Haddington, Dunbar, and North Berwick; these, with Lauder (in Berwickshire) and Jedburgh (in Roxburghshire) formerly joined in sending one member to Parliament, but on the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, were included in their respective shires. The County at large returns one representative, the gentleman at present sitting being Richard Burdon Haldane, Esq. Q.C. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 numbered 6,250. The Lord-Lieutenant of the County is the Earl of Haddington. According to the census returns for 1881, the entire county contained a population of 38,502, and by those for 1891, 37,491, showing a decrease in the ten years of 1,011. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was £241,127; railways, £19,813.

ABERLADY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

THE parish of ABERLADY lies S.E. of the south coast of the mouth of the Firth of Forth; it is very fertile, and contains an area of 6 square miles. It is bounded on the south by Gladsmuir and Haddington, and on the east also by the latter parish and Dirleton. The beach here presents such facilities for the disembarkation of an invading force, that in the course of the war when Britain was menaced with an invasion by France, serious apprehensions were entertained by all the southern districts of Scotland that the enterprising Bonaparte might have thought proper to select it as one of the chief points of attack, in order to divide the operations of the British. The village is situated 15 miles E. from Edinburgh, $5\frac{1}{2}$ N.W. from Haddington, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ S.W. from Dirleton, at the head of a long, flat, sandy beach, and at the mouth of the small river Peffer. James VI., by charter, erected this parish into a temporal barony, which grant, it is said, was confirmed by Charles I. in 1663, but the privileges or immunities conferred thereby are not manifest at the present day. The Earl of Wemyss and March is patron of the parish. The seat of this nobleman, Gosford House, stands nearly a mile south-west of the village. The edifice, which is surrounded by beautiful enclosed grounds, contains a valuable collection of rare paintings, which are shewn in a liberal and courteous manner to visitors. About half a mile from Aberlady, on the north-east, is Luffness House, a mansion belonging to H. W. Hope, Esq., built in 1649, as a fortification, by the French general, De Thermes, for the purpose of aweing the garrison of Haddington, then in the possession of the English. The parish church is a neat structure, and the Board school a well-conducted institution. Acreage, 4,319. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,000; and of the village, 498; in 1891, parish 1,068; village 601.

ATHELSTANEFORD AND DREM.

ATHELSTANEFORD parish lies on the north-east boundary of Haddington, and is separated on the north by Dirleton from the Firth of Forth; the small village lies within $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. from North Berwick, 5 S.E. from Aberlady, and 3 N.E. from Haddington. DREM, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant, is a station on the North British line. It contains a neat and modern church and a Board school. The parish possesses considerable interest from the circumstance of having as ministers successively, in the early part of the last century, two men of eminent poetical genius—Blair, author of "The Grave," and Home, author of "Douglas," to whose memory the inhabitants, assisted by the subscriptions of others, erected a handsome monument in the centre of the village. The manse occupied by the first mentioned stood opposite the present modern manse, near the west end of the churchyard. The site is now comprised in the minister's garden, where an apple tree is pointed out as having stood close to the window of the poet's study. On the author of "Douglas" leaving his pastoral charge, which he did from disgust at the proceedings instituted against him by the presbytery and kirk in general, for the publication of so secular a work, he built and retired to an elegant mansion in the neighbourhood, still exhibited as a pattern of his taste. DREM is a village in this parish, the acreage of which is 5,077. Population in 1881, 762, and in 1891, 745.

DIRLETON,

WITH GULLANE, FENTON, KINGSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DIRLETON, one of the nearest rural villages in this county, and perhaps in Scotland, is 20 miles N.E. from Edinburgh, 7 N. from Haddington, $4\frac{1}{2}$ N.E. from Aberlady, and nearly 3 S.W. from North Berwick, charmingly seated at the head of a low meadow, extending about a mile and a half towards the sea. The houses, which for the most part are built in a plain, neat Gothic style, have tastefully arranged gardens, nearly surrounding an extensive triangular green interspersed with trees. On the south side of this space stands the venerable and magnificent ruin of Dirleton Castle, embosomed among evergreens, and its massive towers richly clothed with ivy. The origin of this castle is lost in the darkness of the middle ages. It is ascertained, however, to have belonged to a noble family in the ninth century, named De Valibus or De Vaux, from whom it was taken, after a tedious siege, by Edward I. in 1298. In 1650 it was reduced and dismantled by the parliamentary general Lambert. About the middle of the 16th century this castle and the estate bestowed the title of the Earl of Dirleton on the Halyburton family. From ancient documents it would appear that a collegiate church was founded here in 1444, by Sir Walter Halyburton, but little is known of its character or site. The present parish church, which stands a little below the green, is a neat erection, bearing date 1661, and considerably enlarged in 1825; it has a substantial square tower. In 1854 a new Gothic open roof was constructed and the whole wood-work stained and varnished, adding much to its beauty. The parish school stands near the church. The parish, which extends about 6 miles in length by $\frac{3}{4}$ in breadth, and embraces 9,146 acres, is low, and, with the exception of a sandy strip along the shore, which is used as a rabbit warren, is fertile to a degree, and not surpassed by any district in East Lothian, yielding excellent green crops and pasture. Besides Dirleton, the parish contains three other villages, namely, GULLANE, FENTON, and KINGSTON. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,506, and in 1891, 1,445.

GULLANE is a small but respectable village, of rather ancient aspect, 2 miles S.W. from Dirleton. At one time this was the capital of the parish to which it gave its name; but in 1612 the seat of worship was removed by Act of Parliament to Dirleton, at the same time changing the name of the parish to its present appellation. On the east side of the links stand the ruins of the ancient kirk, which was dedicated to St. Andrew, and was well endowed. On the small bleak island of Filda, lying off this coast, was an ecclesiastical structure, which served the purpose of a lazaretto in times of severe plague, and its windows acted as beacons to the mariner at night, in warning him of the dangers of an unsafe shore. The links in the vicinity of Gullane are the habitations of vast numbers of rabbits, and are farmed as a warren at a considerable rent; the markets of Newcastle and Leeds being supplied with great quantities annually from the burrows here. The downs of this neighbourhood were at one time celebrated for rearing and training race or fine riding horses. The links of Gullane have now become a favourite resort of the lovers of the ancient game of golf, and it is also rising into importance as a resort for summer visitors.

DUNBAR,

WITH BELHAVEN, EAST BARNES, WEST BARNES, SPOTT, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNBAR is a royal burgh and seaport, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its parish and of the eastern part of the district of East Lothian; 29 miles E. from Edinburgh, 11 E. by N. from Haddington, and 30 N.W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed; occupying a slightly elevated piece of ground on the shore of the North Sea. The North British Railway passes on the south side of the town, where there is a station. Dunbar, at a very early period, was considered a place of strength and commercial importance; but there was no harbour of any size, until Oliver Cromwell, by a grant of £300, began or promoted the construction of one, which now forms the east pier of the present harbour. In 1820 it was improved by the addition of a good dry and graving dock; this, however, having become useless was filled up years ago, and large stores are now erected upon the site. About 1842, a harbour, called, by permission of her Majesty, Victoria Harbour, was built at the joint expense of the town and Fishery Board; about 20 years after it was repaired and greatly extended. It occupies a space of about five acres, and affords ample accommodation to the vessels and boats frequenting Dunbar for fishing purposes. On the west side of the harbour, and within high water-mark, stand the venerable ruins of a castle which in former times must have been very considerable; it was built upon rocks, but the date of its erection cannot be conjectured. It was always considered a place of great defensive consequence, in fact as a key to Scotland on the east border; and it has often been besieged and as often bravely defended. In this castle Edward II. took refuge after his defeat at Bannockburn; and to this secure asylum Bothwell fled, and left the unfortunate Mary in the hands of the associated lords after the disastrous rencontre at Carberry Hill. Its successful defence, for over four months, in 1837 by Black Agnes, Countess of Dunbar (wife of Earl Patrick), against the English, under the Earl of Salisbury, is one of the most memorable events in Scottish history. Subsequently it was demolished by order of the Scottish Parliament, and nothing but dilapidated fragments of this once almost impregnable fortress are now visible, and these have been much reduced by the excavations for Victoria harbour. On a columnar rocky projection, between these ruins and the harbour, was the battery; this has been abandoned by Government, and it is now used as a hospital for fever patients.

The town is built upon a gentle rise from the beach; the principal street is wide and spacious. The gas works are in the hands of the Corporation; and a good supply of soft water is conveyed to the town, from a distance of two miles, by means of pipes. In High street is a branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and also one of the Bank of Scotland, and in Westport is one of the British Linen Company Bank. On a prominent site at the south end is a handsome place of worship in connection with the Free Church of Scotland. There are several public halls in the town, among which is one at the south end called St. Catherine's Hall. The opening of the hall was celebrated by a torchlight procession of the Freemasons, Free Gardeners, and Templars, on the 6th January, 1872. There is a spacious room, fitted either for balls or concerts; also three large rooms held respectively by the Freemasons, Free Gardeners, and Templars, as lodge rooms. The accommodation in every respect is excellent. The houses are generally large, and of pleasing exterior, and few towns present to the stranger a more agreeable and respectable appearance. Dunbar House, formerly the mansion of the Earl of Lauderdale, stands at the northern end of the main street; its grand front faces the sea, and consists of two extensive wings, with a circular centre, forming an elegant elevated portico, supported by co-responding pillars. On the top of the centre, at the back of the edifice, and facing the street, is a finely executed and large proportion of figure of that ideal animal the sphynx, in a couchant position, with wings erect; the house is now used as a barracks for the Second Brigade (Scottish Division), Royal Artillery. The herring fishery has long been a very considerable source of wealth to Dunbar. Frequently three hundred boats were at this station, and large quantities of this fish were sent, in a green state, to the inland counties—sometimes to the extent of from two hundred to three hundred tons a day. A small number are also cured into white or red herrings. Cod fishing is likewise a profitable pursuit here; the produce is mostly despatched to meet the London demand; while Edinburgh and Glasgow are also markets for white fish, lobsters, &c. from this port. The district around Dunbar is one of the richest and best cultivated in Scotland, and produces a much greater supply than is required by the inhabitants. The chief exports are corn, fish, and potatoes, and the imports coal and timber. The manufactures of Dunbar were at one period numerous and extensive; but the most important branch now in operation is fish curing, comprising several extensive concerns. The domestic trade furnishes all the necessary articles of life, and the shops exhibit a respectable display of useful and fashionable productions. Dunbar was elevated to the rank of a royal burgh by David II., and its burghal privileges were confirmed and extended by James IV. and James VI. It was governed by a provost and three bailies, a treasurer, town clerk, and chamberlain, with fifteen members of council. An Act of Parliament for reducing the number of the municipal corporations in Scotland has now limited the number of corporate officers in Dunbar to a provost, three bailies, a treasurer, and seven councillors.

At the southern end of the High street stands the elegant parish church, which was erected on the site of the old kirk in 1819-21. Its architectural style is the modern Gothic, and the body of the edifice is very commodious, containing 1,800 sittings. A handsome square tower, with a pinnacle at each corner, embellishes the structure. The entire building is of a rather dark red stone, not unlike brick when seen at a distance, but the quality of the material is considered of superior excellence and durability; the completion of the fabric cost upwards of £8,000. The interior is enriched with a beautiful marble monument to the memory of George Home, lord high treasurer of Scotland in the reign of James VI. The height of this fine memorial is twenty-six feet, and its breadth twelve. While the church was re-building, the most judicious care was taken not to injure or disturb what is deemed the finest piece of tomb sculpture in Scotland. The United Presbyterians have a place of worship here, as have also the Free Church, the Episcopalians, the Roman Catholics, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Baptists. The town has the advantage of good Board Schools, wherein all the useful branches of education are taught. A commodious building was erected in 1878 (on the beach, near the church), consisting of two wings with a house for the master in the centre. The eastern wing forms the burgh school, the western wing, called the Lamer Street school, being designed for primary education, under a separate master. Other institutions belonging to the burgh and a parish of a praiseworthy nature are well sustained. The country about Dunbar is exceedingly pleasant, and the prospects from the high grounds, which rise gradually from the sea coast, are extensive, and present a variety of delightful objects; the most striking of these are the North Berwick Law and Tantallon Castle, the Bass, the Isle of May, the Firth of Forth, and the mountains of Angus. The parish of Dunbar extends about 8 miles along the coast, and embraces an area of 7,497 statute acres. The soil is rich and dry, and produces all kinds of crops, as early as in Scotland. The market is held on Tuesday. There are two annual fairs—one on the first Tuesday after the 25th of May, the other on the first Tuesday after the 22nd of November. The entire parish contained in 1881 a population of 5,898, of which number 3,661 were given for the town, including that portion comprised in Belhaven. In 1891 the parish numbered 5,210, and the town 3,746.

BELHAVEN is a remarkably neat village, included within the jurisdiction of the burgh of Dunbar, situated about a mile west from that town, at the head of a small bay of the sea, which in former times formed a good harbour. It gives the title of lord to a branch of the family of Hamilton. At a short distance from the village are the remains of an ancient British cemetery. In the village is a church in connection with the Church of Scotland. Population returned with Dunbar.

EAST BARNS is a village in Dunbar parish, about 3 miles S.E. from that town, and a little to the right of the road leading thence to Berwick. In this village there is a school for the eastern district of the parish.

WEST BARNS, another part of the royalty of Dunbar, is about half a mile from Belhaven. In this village, on the river Biel, are extensive corn and flour mills; there is also a manufactory for agricultural implements. Here also is the landward Board school of Dunbar, an excellently conducted and numerous attended institution. Population in 1881, 529, and in 1891, 648.

SPOTT is a small rural village in the parish of that name, situated 2 miles S. from Dunbar. The parish is of an irregular figure, being about 5 miles in length by 2 in breadth, and includes an acreage of 7,583. The low country is well enclosed and cultivated and the higher grounds afford good pasture. Spott House, in this parish, is romantically perched upon a rock, rising from a low glen, and surrounded with beautiful pleasure grounds. In this neighbourhood was fought on the 3rd of September, 1650, the battle of Dunbar, so decisively unfortunate to the royal cause, in which the Scotch forces, under General Leslie, were totally routed by Cromwell. This parish contained in 1881 a population of 579, and in 1891, 472.

EAST LINTON IN PRESTONKIRK,

GARVALD AND BARO, STENTON, WHITEKIRK AND TYNNINGHAME, AND WHITTINGHAME.

EAST LINTON is a village in the parish of Prestonkirk, and a burgh by the adoption of the Police (Scotland) Act, 1862, 22 miles s. from Edinburgh, 6 s.e. from North Berwick, 6 w. from Dunbar, and 5 n.e. from Haddington, eligibly situated on the left bank of the Tyne. The parish church, built in 1770, is at Preston, about a quarter of a mile north-east from East Linton; in the latter are a United Presbyterian church, a Free church, and a public school. The tower of the Free church was in 1888 adorned with an illuminated clock, proving very useful to the inhabitants. The parish of Prestonkirk measures about 4 miles each way, and comprises 7,058 acres; the surface is agreeably varied, and the soil fertile and well cultivated. The North British line passes through the village, and has a station here. There is a neat and commodious Combination Poorhouse. About a mile south-west of Linton are the ruins of Hailes Castle, noted as having been one of the residences of Mary and Bothwell; and one mile north of the village is the elegant mansion of Smeaton. From the southern part of the parish rises the hill of Traprain Law to the height of seven hundred feet above the level of the sea. A market or meeting is held at East Linton every Monday during the harvest season for hiring reapers, and an important cattle market is held here annually in October, and every other Monday. In 1881 the parish of Prestonkirk contained a population of 1,929, and in 1891, 1,798.

GARVALD AND BARO, a united parish, is bounded by Morham and Whittinghame on the north and east, and by Gifford on the west, extending from near the centre of the county southward, among the Lammermoor hills, to the borders of the Berwickshire. Within the parish are fine arable lands and also sheep walks; and the district contains a number of remains of antiquity. Among the latter are the ruins of Nunraw, a nunnery once of great importance, now the residence and property of Walter Wingate Gray, Esq. The village of Garvald, a nice, sequestered rural little place, is seated in a fertile valley on the banks of the small river Papan, which a little lower is called Biel water, 22 miles s.e. from Edinburgh, 8½ s.w. from Dunbar, 5 s. from Linton, and nearly 6 s.e. from Haddington. Acreage, 19,442. Population of the parish in 1881 was 753, and of the village, 395; in 1891 the parish numbered 600, and the village, 280.

STENTON is a parish and small village, the latter situated 4½ miles s.e. from East Linton. The principal object of attraction in the parish is a beautiful artificial serpentine piece of water about a mile south of the village; it is nearly two miles in length, and averages about 400 yards in breadth, though in some places it is double the latter proportion, and in others much narrower. Its course is so sinuous that the stranger can form no just idea of its length; its banks are high, steep and well clothed with wood, and the scenery throughout the meanderings of the lake is of a delightful and picturesque character. By the kindness of the proprietress, Mrs. C. N. Ogilvie, of Archerfields, Winton and Biel, parties are allowed to ramble through the grounds and plantations, or make excursions upon the lake, the accommodation of boats for the purpose being provided. In 1881 the parish, which comprises an acreage of 7,676, contained a population of 608; which in 1891 had decreased to 359.

WHITEKIRK is a very small village, in the united parish of Whitekirk and Tynninghame, 4 miles n. from Linton. It consists of but a few humble dwellings, the ancient parish church and manse, and a public school.

Two miles from Linton and the same from Whitekirk is TYNNINGHAME village, also inconsiderable, both in size and population. Tynninghame House, the elegant family seat of the Earl of Haddington, is half a mile from the village, enchantingly environed by woods and walks of superlative beauty, at the head of a park sloping gently southward to the Tyne, near its mouth. In 1881 Whitekirk and Tynninghame, the acreage of which is 6,195, contained a population of 1,051; in 1891, 933.

WHITTINGHAME is an extensive parish reaching from the borders of Berwickshire, a length of 11 miles northward, and varying in breadth from 6 to 4 miles, and still narrower in the middle, comprising 15,595 acres. In the northern division of the parish are the beautiful pleasure grounds and plantations surrounding the fine mansion of Whittinghame, the seat of the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, M.P. The grounds are open to the public under certain restrictions. The village, a very small one, is 3 miles s. from the village of Linton, and 6 e. from Haddington. In 1881 this parish had a population of 639; and in 1891, 585.

FALA AND SOUTRA,

WITH HUMBLE AND BLACKSHIELDS.

FALA AND SOUTRA is a united parish, the first of which is within the eastern border of Edinburghshire, the other in the county of Haddington. The villages of Fala and Fala-dam are situated on the road from Edinburgh to Lauder, about 14 miles S.E. from the former, and 11 S.W. from Haddington. The parish comprehends part of the Lammermoor ridge, of which Soutra Hill is the north-west point. From the foot of the hill the surface is nearly level, having a tolerably fertile soil, and the lands are in a high state of cultivation. The Kirk of Fala stands on an eminence overhanging the road. BLACKSHIELDS is a small village in this parish, the acreage of which is 6,064, its population in 1881 being 312, and in 1891, 248. The parish of HUMBLE lies in the south-western part of Haddingtonshire, bounded by Salton and Ormiston on the north, part of Bolton and Gifford on the east, and Fala and Soutra on the west. It is 5 miles in length, by rather more than 3 in breadth, lying chiefly on the Lammermoor range of hills near Berwickshire. The high lands are pastoral, but the low grounds are well enclosed and cultivated. Ironstone and coal are said to lie under the surface of some parts, but neither has been wrought. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a parochial school are in the parish, which encloses an area of 9,316 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 907.

GIFFORD AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GIFFORD is a respectable village, and the capital of the parish of Yester, 20 miles E.S.E. from Edinburgh, 9 S.E. from Tranent, and 4 S. from Haddington; charmingly situated, on a rivulet, tributary to the Tyne. The village, which is well built, consists of two spacious streets of unequal length, one end of the long-street being ornamented with a fine avenue of lofty trees, which extends for a mile in a southerly direction, and terminates at Yester House, the noble family mansion of the Marquis of Tweeddale, whose example and fostering influence has accomplished so much in advancing the agriculture of Scotland. The parish church stands at the eastern end of the shorter street, and what was formerly the parochial school at the north end of the longer one; this building is now used for lectures, &c., another schoolhouse having been built at the east end of the village. The church, which was erected in 1708, contains a pulpit of oak of much greater antiquity than the building itself, called Knox's pulpit, so called from this celebrated preacher having been it is said born in Gifford, but which circumstance is denied by very creditable authorities, and the honour bestowed upon Haddington. The scenery around here is very picturesque. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in March, the third Tuesday in June, and the first Tuesday in October. The population of the parish of Yester, the acreage of which is 8,848, was in 1881, 924, of which Gifford contained 382. The numbers in 1891 were 716 and 305 respectively.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON A BRANCH OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE, Station, at HADDINGTON, 4½ miles distant

OMNIBUS.

A bus leaves Gifford daily at 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. for Haddington, returning from Haddington at 10 30 a.m. and 7 45 p.m.—R. Tait, proprietor

HADDINGTON,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BOLTON AND MORHAM AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HADDINGTON, is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the county town of East Lothian, and the capital of the parish of its name, 17 miles E. from Edinburgh, 88 N.W. from Berwick-upon-Tweed, 11 W. by S. from Dunbar, and 10 S. from North Berwick; eligibly and pleasantly situated on the left bank of the river Tyne, and is the terminus of a branch line from the North British railway. Haddington is unquestionably of very ancient origin; for in a charter granted by Ad., the widow of Prince Henry (and mother of Malcolm IV. and William the Lion), dated 1178, she styled it Meum Burghum de Haddington. Much ingenuity has been exercised in trying to discover the derivation of the name of the town. The King's army rested here the night before the battle of Prestonpans; and some years since, in excavating a site for a tank, human bones, with those of horses, leather belting and pieces of decayed iron, were found in considerable quantities. The suburb, called Nungate, derives its name from a nunnery founded by Ada, which stood about a quarter of a mile from the town. It was in this abbey or nunnery that a parliament was convened on the 7th of July, 1548, during the siege of Haddington, when consent was given to the marriage of the unfortunate Mary to the Dauphin of France, and to her being educated at that court. The street from the West Port to the Town House, now called Court street, was of old named "King street," no doubt from the King's palace being situated therein. It was here that Alexander II. first saw the light, having been born in the palace on the 24th of August, 1198. At the east end of Nungate street is seen the roofless ruin of St. Martin's Church, which has been but little used since the Reformation. The town has suffered severely at different periods by conflagrations and inundations. In 1216 it was burnt by King John, and in 1241 it shared the same fate by accident. In 1358 whole villages were swept away by the overflow of the Tyne, the waters of which approached the monastery, when, it is related by a monkish chronicle, "a nun seized the statue of the Virgin, and threatened to throw it into the flood unless she (Mary) protected her house from destruction," whereupon the waters gradually retired within their ordinary banks. The last great conflagration, which was accidental, occurred about 200 years ago, by the carelessness of a nurserymaid. The 4th October, 1775, is memorable for the rising of the Tyne, eight feet nine inches, at which it continued for several hours. A plate recording this occurrence is placed at the east corner of High street. Considering the great antiquity of this burgh, it may be justly styled handsome. The streets, which are spacious, are gas lighted by a company formed in 1835, whose works are erected at the west end of the town, in which quarter conspicuously stand the County Buildings, the architecture of which is of the old English style; they contain sheriff and justice of the peace court rooms, with appropriate offices, and jury and witness rooms. The erection of this building cost £5,470. The Town's Buildings, to which was added in 1831 a fine spire, 170 feet in height, at an expense of about £1,500, may be recognised as another feature of improvement to the burgh; they comprise the burgh council room, and assembly and public reading room. This pile, which has evidently been erected at different periods, forms the extreme western end of that long range of buildings separating the spacious High street from the equally wide Market street. In the Corn Exchange, opened 29th September, 1854, is held on the Friday, one of the most animated grain markets in the kingdom. The county Lunatic Asylum (opened in 1866) stands a short distance from the town, and is a spacious edifice. The suburb of Nungate is approached across the Tyne by the Waterloo bridge, of one arch, built in 1817; as also by another bridge, ancient and narrow, of three small arches. The corporation of this burgh consists of a provost, three bailies, a dean guild, a treasurer, and twelve councillors; they hold a court every Monday. A sheriff and commissary court sits every Thursday; one for small debts every alternate Thursday, a justice of peace court the second Tuesday of each month; a court of quarter sessions is held on the first Tuesday in March, May, and August, and on the last Tuesday of October; and an adjourned quarter sessions on the second Thursday in January.

The trade of Haddington consists principally in corn; and it is considered one of the leading grain marts of Scotland. There are also agricultural implement and coach building works, one for the manufacture of sacking, two breweries, two ironfoundries, tanneries, two cloth mills, and two corn mills. Four banking establishments afford monetary accommodation—a branch of the British Linen Company, the Bank of Scotland, Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland. An agricultural society was instituted in Haddington long since, and another at Salton; they were united in 1819, and now form one of the most flourishing local associations in the kingdom, annually distributing in premiums about £300; the Marquis of Tweeddale is patron. Of late years the public have received the advantage of a free library, provided with books in all departments of literature; there are also a law and an excellent subscription library. The bowling green occupies the ground between Elm House and the Nungate bridge, and is interesting from the fact of its being the oldest in Scotland, having been used successfully for over 200 years.

The parish church is a venerable and capacious structure; from its architecture and some traditional records it is supposed to have been erected about the twelfth or thirteenth century. The west end is the only portion now used, in the repair and improvement of which nearly £6,000 was expended in 1811; the east end of the ancient monastery and the old square tower are now a ruin. In a corner of the edifice is the burial place of the Lauderdale family, who for many generations possessed Lethington, or "Lennox Love," at present the seat of the Right Hon. Lord Blantyre; and in the aisle there are many statues of the Lauderdale succession, large as life, reclining on beds of state. The designations of the other structures for divine worship, with their respective localities and ministers, are given in a subsequent page. The charitable institutions are numerous, and highly creditable to the burgh, as are the educational departments; and several societies and clubs are established on the most respectable footing, for various laudable objects. Haddington lays claim to the honour of being the natal place of that unbending reformer, John Knox, and the house where it is contended he was born was generally pointed out in Gifford gate; the village of Gifford, however, contests the claim. The Knox Institute, erected in 1878 in memory of John Knox, takes the place of the Burgh School. It is scheduled as one of the secondary or higher class schools of Scotland, and provides a first-class classical, mathematical, and English education for children of the district. It has accommodation for 400 pupils, and was erected at a cost of £7,000, £3,000 of which was contributed by persons friendly to the object. The weekly market is held on Friday; the sale of oats commences at twelve, barley at twenty minutes past twelve, beans and peas at a quarter to one, and wheat at one. A weekly auction for the sale of live stock is also held every Monday. A cattle fair is held in October, and the United East Lothian Agricultural Society hold their meetings here for the show of stock, implements, seed, &c.; for the show of seed corn in February and October, of stock in March and July, and roots and poultry in December. Population of the burgh in 1881, 4,043, and in 1891, 8,770.

BOLTON is a parish and village—the latter, a small one, is situated on the road from Haddington to Lauder, 3 miles S.W. from the former. About the close of the fifteenth century the lands of Bolton were wrongfully seized by the Hepburns, one of which infamous family, John Hepburn, was executed as the associate of the Earl of Bothwell, his chief in the murder of Darnley. The church and the public school are both in the village; the former is a substantial erection, in the modern Gothic style, ornamented with a square tower; the latter is a well built and judiciously conducted institution. Acreage, 3,106. Population in 1881, 887, and in 1891, 271.

MORHAM, a small parish about 3 miles S.E. from Haddington, figured largely in the time of Queen Mary, whose third husband, James, Earl of Bothwell, was proprietor of Mainshill. At that time there was a comparatively large village, which has, however, long ago disappeared, and the parish is now wholly agricultural. The parish church is a plain stone building, and there is also a Board school and school house erected in 1875, at a cost of about £1,300. Acreage, 2,087. Population in 1881, 209, and in 1891, 199.

INNERWICK AND OLDHAMSTOCKS,

THE parish of INNERWICK is bounded by Oldhamstocks on the east, Spot and Dunbar on the west, the sea on the north, and Craushaws and Longformacus (in Berwickshire) on the south. It measures 10 miles in length, by a breadth varying from 2 to 3, and embraces an area of 13,157 statute acres. The land towards the sea coast is level, and very fertile; inland it rises into gently swelling hills, which are ornamented with a variety of plantations, and the fields are all well enclosed. The village of Innerwick is 30 miles E. from Edinburgh, 14 E. from Haddington, and 4 S. from Dunbar, lying rather more than a mile to the west of the road leading from the latter town to Berwick. The Established church, built in 1784, is a neat edifice. In 1870 the interior of this church was thoroughly renovated. A Board school was built in 1860, and enlarged in 1876. There is also a Free church, situated about half a mile from the village. About a mile west of the latter edifice is the modern and handsome mansion of Mr. Richard Hunter, of Thurston; and about three-quarters of a mile to the south-east of Innerwick are the remains of the castle of that name. The situation of the ruins is rather secluded; they stand on the summit of a rocky eminence, overhanging a woody glen, which divides the castle from the fortlet of Thornton. The castle, which originally belonged to the Hamiltons of Innerwick, was besieged, taken, and destroyed, after an obstinate resistance by the troops under the Duke of Somerset. There are likewise the remains of several military encampments in the neighbourhood. Population of the parish in 1881, 777, and in 1891, 761.

OLDHAMSTOCKS parish (a portion of which is in the county of Berwick) is between 7 and 8 miles in length, by a breadth of about

2, and includes an area of 8,897 statute acres. The parish of Innerwick bounds it on the north-west, west, and part of the south, and Cockburnspath lies on its east. The land is fertile on the sea coast, and rises gradually towards the Lammermoor Hills, which are chiefly pastoral. The village is situated 3 miles S.E. from Innerwick, in a valley on the road from Dunbar to Duns. Dunglass, the elegant modern mansion of Sir Basil Hall, Bart., ornaments that part of the parish near the coast. Dunglass Castle is occasionally noticed in Scottish history. It was originally one of the many strongholds of the Earls of Home, and still gives its title to Lord Dunglass. In 1640 the Earl of Haddington, and several others who had joined the covenanted, took possession of Dunglass Castle, for the purpose of watching the garrison of Berwick. While here the Earl received a letter from General Leslie, and was standing in the court yard reading it to the company there assembled, when the powder magazine blew up, which, throwing down one of the side walls, overwhelmed his lordship, together with his auditors, who all perished in the ruins. The deed is said to have been perpetrated by one of the Earl's faithless attendants, who ignited a barrel of gunpowder with a hot iron. Population of the parish in 1881, 568, and in 1891, 529.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

John Douglas, station master

NORTH BERWICK AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

NORTH BERWICK is a parish containing a royal burgh and seaport, 23 miles N.E. from Edinburgh, 11 N.W. from Dunbar, and 10 N. from Haddington; situated on a low sandy plain on the shore of the German Ocean, at the entrance of the Firth of Forth, and on a branch of the North British railway. It consists principally of one long main street, running east and west, another proceeding in a contrary direction towards the sea, and two or three small ones;
and on the East and West Links are some houses of a superior kind.
The chief trade of Berwick is the export of potatoes, &c.; the imports are coal and bones for manure. The harbour, which is small, is formed by a tolerably good pier; but, although there is water enough for a large class of vessels, the rocks render the entrance so difficult that but small ones make the attempt; these can ride here in perfect safety, the harbour being boomel. Fidra roads, about two miles to the west, are considered perfectly safe. In the offing are several bleak islets, only of value as rabbit warrens; and 3 miles to the east within 2 miles of the coast, is the Bass Rock, the terror of seamen. It is a mile in circumference, and rises 350 ft. above the surface of the sea; the channel betwixt it and the land is very deep, and is frequently taken by steam vessels to and from London and Leith. The Pass is inaccessible on all sides except by a narrow pass on the south-west, towards the land. A fearful caverned passage perforates through the rock from east to west, which may be explored at low water. Commanding the landing place are the remains of a small fortification, which at one time was of considerable strength, and could then only be reached by ladders, or a bucket and chain; it existed as a stronghold for a long period, was a state prison during the reign of the two Stuarts, and became distinguished in the early part of the reign of William III. for the per-severing fortitude with which it held out against the new dynasty. The Bass is inhabited by myriads of sea fowl, especially Solan geese. Nearly opposite the Bass, and about 3 miles east of Berwick, are the interesting ruins of Tantallan Castle, referred to by Sir Walter Scott as the parting scene of Angus and Marmion, in his poem of "Marmion." About a quarter of a mile south-west are seen the extensive remains of an abbey, said to have been founded by David

I. for a sisterhood of Cistercian nuns; and not far distant rises North Berwick Law, a conical hill, the summit of which is 600 feet above the level of the sea.

The date of the first charter, erecting Berwick into a royal burgh, is unknown, that instrument having been lost or destroyed. James VI., however, granted to it a writ confirmatory of all its former privileges, by which it is governed by two bailies, a treasurer, and six councillors. The Sheriff's Small Debt Court is held on the third Wednesday in January, and the second Wednesday in May, July and October, and the Justice of Peace Courts when necessary.
There are five churches and several good schools in the town.
There are several first-class hotels here, the largest being the Marine, a noble edifice erected in 1876, in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, at a cost of £35,000; additions were made in 1881, at an expense of £10,000, and again in 1893, at a further cost of £12,000, thus making it one of the best equipped and most elegantly furnished establishments in the kingdom. The area of the parish is 5,067 acres, and its population in 1881 was 2,688, and in 1891, 3,038.

PRESTONPANS,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF PRESTON, COCKENZIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

PRESTONPANS is a market and post town and burgh of barony, 9 miles E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.W. from North Berwick, 9½ W.N.W. from Haddington, and 3 E. from Musselburgh; situated on the shore of the Forth of Forth, the North British Railway passing about a half a mile to the south. The town consists principally of one long street running parallel with the Forth, without any public buildings worthy of particular notice. It is much frequented during the bathing season by visitors from Edinburgh and different parts of the country. The harbour is situated a little to the westward of the town, and is called Morison Haven; it has a quay for shipping coal and the manufactures of the place, which comprise earthenware, fire-bricks, and other articles, made from fire-clay, common bricks, tiles and salt; the latter originated here at an early date, having been made by the monks in 1189. There is also an extensive brewery and the large works of Messrs. James Mellis & Co., whose soaps have obtained a well deserved reputation. Oysters are taken in the Forth, near the town, and considerable quantities are sent to the markets of Edinburgh, Newcastle, and even to London. The mines of coal are very rich in the neighbourhood; a seam of this valuable mineral is now being worked by the Prestongrange Coal and Fire-brick Company, Limited, within two hundred yards of the quay at Morison Haven. The seam is eight to ten feet in thickness, beneath which it is ascertained there exist eight or nine other strata, making an aggregate body of workable coal of fully forty feet; the roof of this mine is composed of a stratum of fire-clay from two to three feet thick, and a band of iron-stone of six inches in thickness. Prestonpans received its charter as a burgh of barony in 1617, in favour of Sir John Hamilton, of Preston, which ancient village (Preston) is included with the eastern part of the town in the charter; a suburb called "Kuitlie," or more properly Cuthill, the western portion, also enjoys a charter, which was granted originally to the abbey of Newbattle; this division is possessed by Sir G. G. Suttie, who is also patron of the parish, which is one of the smallest in the county.

The places of worship are the parish church and a Free church. A public school and some benefit societies are in the town; the principal charity, however, is Schaw's Hospital, at Preston village, an extensive building, erected in 1831, in the old English style of architecture, at an expense of nearly £3,000, out of the funds bequeathed by its benevolent founder, Dr. Schaw, in 1781. The institution was first opened in 1784, in Preston House, which stood behind the present erection; it was founded for the education and maintenance of twenty-one boys, children of indigent parents—those of the name of Schaw, McNeil, Cunningham and Stewart having a preference of entry. This trust has been modified at the instance of the Endowed Schools Commissioners. Part of the fund is now devoted to giving free education to a large number of the children in the public school, and another part is spent in bursaries open to the public school children, in Haddingtonshire. The house is now occupied by Miss Mary Murray's Hospital—an establishment for the training of domestic servants. The principal seats in the neighbourhood are Preston Grange, Drummore, Northfield, and Preston Lodge. Preston Tower, in this vicinity, formerly the seat of the Hamiltons of Preston, is an attractive ruin. At the distance of a mile and a half from the town, at a hamlet called MEADOW MILL, was fought the battle to which the name Prestonpans has been appended, on the 21st of September, 1745, between the adherents of the Stuart family and the English troops, under the command of General Cope, in which the latter were routed. In this engagement fell Colonel Gardiner, to whose memory a handsome monument has been erected. The house (Bankton House), once occupied by this revered officer, and in which he expired after the battle, stands a little to the west of Meadow Mill, and is still pointed out to the enquiring stranger. In the main street is a handsome monument to the memory of the late Thomas Alexander, C.B. director general of the medical department of the British army. The parish has an area of 1,291 acres, and its population in 1881 was 2,573, and in 1891, 2,659.

COCKENZIE is a fishing village in the parish of Tranet, 1 mile E. from Prestonpans, situated on the road leading to North Berwick and the shore of the Forth of Forth. It has a small harbour, substantially constructed by Mr. Cadell, for shipping coal. A new harbour was opened in September, 1880, by Lord Elcho, at a cost of £11,000, mainly subscribed by the fishermen. A very handsome school and schoolmaster's house, the gift of a liberal donor, are situated in the village. A fair is held here on the first Thursday in November. Population in 1881, 1,612.

SALTON (EAST AND WEST), PENCAITLAND,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

SALTON parish lies chiefly in a fertile valley on the north side of the Lymmormoor Hills; it is well enclosed and cultivated, and various parts of the district are embellished with thriving plantations. The village of EAST SALTON is situated 15 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 5 S.W. from Haddington and the same distance S.E. from Tynet. The parish church, which stands in the village, was almost rebuilt in 1805, in the modern Gothic style, and cruciform, having a fine spire 90 feet high. The celebrated Bishop Burnet had Salton for his first benefice, and for 4 years performed the duties of parish minister; and it was here that he used the only book of common prayer known to have existed in the Episcopal Church of Scotland during the reign of Charles II. This eminent churchman and historian bequeathed a valuable library to the parish, besides a considerable sum for educating, clothing, and apprenticing thirty poor children; the proceeds of the bequests amount now to about £96 per annum. The small river Salton and the Tyne are boundary streams of the parish, which has abundance of excellent lime. WEST SALTON, in the same parish, is about a mile from East Salton; between the two villages is Salton Hall, an elegant mansion, the residence of John Fletcher, Esq. The population of the parish, which embraces an area of 3,812 statute acres, was in 1881, 575, and in 1891, 495.

PENCAITLAND is a rural village and parish; the former situated 2½ miles N.W. from East Salton, the latter being divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Tyne. The district forms the east-most limit of the great coal range of the Lothians. The coal here is of excellent quality, lying about fifty-six yards deep, in a nearly horizontal stratum of two feet nine inches thick; an inferior coal is, however, obtained at only sixteen yards below the surface. Besides coal, the parish abounds in good limestone and freestone; there is also a substantially-built school, which was enlarged in 1887, at the cost of about £1,300, and an ancient cross. About half a mile to the north-west is Winton Castle, an extensive pile, partly ancient and partly modern, formerly the residence of the Earls of Winton, previous to the attainder of the Seaton family in 1715. It is now the property of Mrs. C. N. Ogilvy, of Archerfield and Biel. Fountain Hall, the seat of Sir Thomas North Dick Lauder, Bart., and Tyneholm House, are also handsome mansions in this parish. On the eastern side of the river, which is crossed by an old stone bridge, stands the parish church. The population of the parish, the area of which is 5,075 statute acres, was in 1881, 1,107, and in 1891, 1,125.

TRANENT,GLADSMUIR, WITH PENSTON, ORMISTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

TRANENT, a town and post village in the parish of that name, is 10 miles E. from Edinburgh, 18 W. by S. from Dunbar, and 7 W. from Haddington; situated on the main road from the latter town to the Scottish metropolis, at the head of elevated ground; the North British railway passes about a mile to the north. The town consists of a street running from west to east along the line of the public road, with another diverging from about the middle of it. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the adjacent collieries, which have been wrought in this quarter from the very first discovery of coal in Scotland, while others are occupied in agriculture. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is established in the town. The church, which stands at the foot of the town, is a plain edifice with a square tower; Colonel Gardiner, who fell in the battle of Prestonpans, was interred in it. There are also a Free church erected in 1814, a United Presbyterian church, built in 1826, a Roman Catholic church, opened July 28th, 1892, and handsome public schools. A new Town Hall, for public entertainments, &c., was built in 1888, at a cost of £1,000. Near the southern boundary of the parish is Elphinstone Tower, once a baronial residence; and in other parts of the parish are the ruins of Waterfalls Castle, Seton Castle, and the remains of a once collegiate church. ELPHINSTONE is a small village in this parish, 2 miles S. from Tranent. Acreage of the parish, 5,919. Population in 1881, 5,198, and in 1891, 5,470.

GLADSMUIR is a beautiful arable parish, rising in a gentle acclivity from the south shore of the Firth of Forth. The parish church and school stand on the main road between Haddington and Tranent, nearly 4 miles W. from the former town and 8 E. from the latter. The district abounds in coal, and several pits are wrought at PENSTON, which is the principal village in the parish, and chiefly inhabited by colliers. George Hariot, the founder of the hospital at Edinburgh, is said to have been a native of this parish, and Dr. Robinson was its clergyman while engaged in writing the "History of Scotland." From the proximity of the hamlet of Gladsmuir to the scene of the battle of Prestonpans, that conflict was called by the Jacobite party

"the battle of Gladsmuir." LONGNIDDRY is a village in the parish. The population of the parish, the acreage of which is 7,043, was in 1881, 1,747, and in 1891, 1,604.

The parish of ORMISTON lies in the western part of the county; it is chiefly level, under the best state of cultivation, and well enclosed and planted. The village is situated in the northern part of the parish, at the distance of 2½ miles S. of Tranent, and consists of one spacious street, with a cross in the centre. A monument to the memory of the late Dr. Moffat, missionary to South Africa, has been erected in this his native village, at a cost of upwards of £200, which was raised by public subscription. The parish church stands a mile and a half to the south-west and Ormiston Hall one mile south of the village. One mile further, on the summit on an ancient eminence called Dodridge Law, are traces of a Danish camp. Acreage of the parish, 3,444. Population in 1881 1,026, and in 1891, 1,178.

INVERNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is a very extensive county, being the first in Scotland in magnitude, though only ranking the eleventh in population. It is bounded on the north by the counties of Ross and Cromarty; on the east by those of Nairn and Moray—the Firth of the latter also touching it on this quarter; on the south are the shires of Perth and Argyle, with a small part of Aberdeen; and the Atlantic Ocean washes its western boundary; a small insulated district between the shires of Banff and Moray belongs to it, and several of the Hebrides are politically attached to it. The county (excluding the isles) extends in length, from the point of Arisaig on the west to that of Ardersier on the east, about ninety-two miles, and its greatest breadth is over fifty miles. The whole surface comprises 4,054 square miles of land, and 192 of lakes. Taking the computed number of acres at 3,000,000, little more than one-tenth is cultivated. The shire comprehends a variety of districts of local importance—as Badenoch in its south part, Lochaber on the south-west, Moidart on the west, Gleuegl on the north-west, Glengany in its central part, and others of less consequence, as Glengary, Glenmorison, Glenshiel, &c. The islands annexed to the county are Skye, Harris, North and South Uist, Bebecula, Barra, Eigg, Muck, Rum, and Canna; besides a number of islets.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—The greater part of the surface of this county consists of lofty mountains, which, especially towards the west, tower above each other in stupendous magnificence. It would be vain to attempt a particular description of the scenery to be met with in this great county, comprehending, as already mentioned, so many mountains, between all of which are deep glens of boundless variety and beauty, each having its stream and its lake, and many shrouded in woods. One of the mountains is, nevertheless, too conspicuous to pass over in silence—the noble and celebrated Ben Nevis, the highest elevation in Great Britain, soaring to the height of 4,406 feet above the level of Loch Linnhe. This remarkable eminence stands to the north-east of Fort William, near the shore of an arm of the sea. From the top, in clear weather, a view can be obtained across nearly the whole of the north of Scotland from sea to sea; it is generally enveloped, however, in a mantle of clouds, and is toilsome in the ascent. It consists principally of a fine brown porphyry, and contains red granite of a most beautiful grain; it is said also to possess veins of silver and lead. Being cleft in many places to the very base, by ravines and glens, its precipices are of prodigious altitude; one of them, the inaccessible eyrie of eagles, is nearly 500 feet perpendicular; and in the fissures, even in the warmest weather, snow remains unmelted. Around its southern base flows the Nevis streamlet, through the glen of that name; it was at the opening of this valley that the Marquis of Montrose achieved the brilliant victory of Inverlochy. On the summit is an Observatory, erected by the Scottish Meteorological Society, and about a hundred yards to the south of this is an hotel, which was opened in July, 1885. The other remarkable eminences are Melfourvie, 3,600; Scarsough, 3,412; and Craig Padrig, 1,150 feet respectively above the level of the sea. Inverness-shire is divided into two almost equal parts, by a valley running from south-west to north-west, parallel to the Grampians. This valley is called Glen-more-na h' Alabin, or the "Great Glen of Albin," and appears to be a deep continuous rent between the chains of enormous mountains which range in the same direction; through the greater part of its length the glen is filled with water, or rather an almost connected succession of lakes, not rising very considerably above the level of the sea—a circumstance which suggested the comprehensive plan of forming the Caledonian Canal. Of that stupendous undertaking we shall have occasion to speak hereafter. On the eastern side of the county, agriculture is conducted with as much skill, spirit, and success as in any district northward of the Grampians; in the interior, and on the western coast, it languishes under the natural obstructions of soil and climate. Along the whole of the western division the climate is much more rainy than on the eastern side of the island; it is seldom fair weather in the latter with a westerly wind. On account of these disadvantages, the principal employment of the farmer in this district is the management of black cattle and sheep, especially the former. The mountains and forests are widely inhabited by the red deer and roe, who roam in safety through seclusions, and lodge in recesses impenetrable to man; the alpine and common hare and other species of game are also abundant. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are in general fertile. The military roads in this county, made by the soldiers under General Wade, never fail to excite the astonishment of travellers. Additional roads were formed, and bridges constructed, under the direction of Government, through every district of this extensive shire. On the confines of the county are extensive tracts of natural wood, evidently the remains of much larger forests; the fir woods of Glenmore and Strathspey are supposed to be more than all the other natural woods of Scotland if summed together. The trees that grow naturally are oak, fir, birch, ash, mountain-ash, holly, elm, wild-green, hazel, and the Scottish poplar; those planted are chiefly larch, spruce, silver-fir, beech, plane, and fruit trees. Those districts in cultivation, along with those in the course of gradual adaptation to purposes of husbandry, are in the north-east or Lowland quarter, where there are to be seen many fine fields, yielding good crops of wheat, barley, oats, and turnips; potatoes, in several parishes, are produced in great abundance. In the district in the vicinity of Spey, near Castle Grant, a very improved system of cultivation has for many years been introduced. In this shire, as in other counties in the north, the removal of the poorer native classes, or small farmers, by the landlords has thinned the population, expatriated thousands, and reduced to the lowest conceivable depths of human suffering those wretched families who have been permitted to remain in rude hamlets on the sea-shore. During the severe winters of 1836-7, and likewise 1846-7, the distress of the more indigent inhabitants of the Highlands (owing to the deplorable failure of their naturally limited crops, the extreme inclemency of the weather, and the almost total destitution of fuel), was of the most appalling description; in the islands more particularly this combination of calamities was experienced to a direful extent. In the Isle of Skye the want of fuel had reduced the unhappy occupants to such a state of desperation that, it has been asserted, lots were cast among a certain number of poor families to decide which should consent to the destruction of their hut for the purpose of furnishing firewood for the general good. The case of these poor people excited universal sympathy throughout the kingdom, and subscriptions, headed magnificently by London, poured in for their relief; the sum thus promptly raised was very considerable. Among the provincial towns of England, Manchester stood eminently conspicuous in the humane and benevolent work. For some years past, great dissension has existed among the small farmers, or crofters, as they are termed, in consequence of the excessive rents exacted from them by the landowners. This, at times, resulted in serious disturbances, and the officers who were enforcing the demands of the landowners had to be assisted by the military. We now return from this digression to our more general and cheering account of the capabilities of this wide district. The exports of the county may be briefly enumerated in the articles of cattle, wool and corn; the skins of goats, deer, roes, foxes, hares and rabbits; salmon, her-ings, dried and salted fish, and fir timber, with the produce of the labours of the hempen and thread manufactures. The spinning of flax and wool is the occupation of the females, in their respective families, over the whole county. The principal imports will be detailed under the head of INVERNESS. Limestone is everywhere abundant; and in many parts are to be found marble, slate and granite, the latter said to be the most beautiful in the world.

RIVERS AND LAKES, CANALS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the Ness, which flows from Loch Ness to the Moray Firth; the next is the Spey, which, though a larger river in its lower parts, is about the same size while running through the shire; the smaller rivers are the Beaulie, the Foyers, the Garry, the Coltrine, the Glaes, the Morriston, the Enneric, the Kinnie, with others of still minor note; the whole produce ample supplies of trout and salmon. On the Foyers is a celebrated waterfall, descending in one leap to the depth of two hundred feet; a dense mist is continually seen rising from the broken water, and the noise resulting from the fall may be heard at a considerable distance. The CALEDONIAN CANAL, before adverted to, is composed of a chain of lakes, connected with the sea on either side of the island by artificial watercourses and locks, and stretches across Inverness-shire, in a south-westerly direction, from Inverness, on the Moray Firth, to Loch Eil, on the western coast—a distance of about sixty miles. To connect the several lakes by artificial navigation, and thereby the Western Ocean with the North Sea, by the Moray Firth was an undertaking to which a great portion of the public attention had long been directed; and it was at length commenced by Government in 1803-4. After a persevering labour of about eighteen years, and at an expense of upwards of £800,000, the canal was opened for the admission of vessels in 1823; up to 1830, the total expense fell very little short of one million sterling. The canal is twenty feet deep, fifty feet wide at bottom, and one hundred and ten feet wide at surface, and is much used by steamers and sailing vessels, more especially the former, large numbers of tourists going by this route to the north. Besides the locks, which have been made subservient to this great line of canal navigation, there are others of greater or less magnitude scattered throughout the district; and several arms of the sea advance into the western shore of the county. RAILWAYS have extended their iron influence to this remote county by means of the Highland lines, which are complete as far north as Thurso and Wick, an important branch of which runs by Dingwall to Ströme Ferry, thus opening a communication with the Isle of Skye.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Inverness-shire comprehends twenty-four parishes, and thirteen parts of parishes. The county is singularly destitute of towns—the only one it possesses being INVERNESS, which is a royal burgh; it joins with Fortrose (in Ross-shire), Nairn (in the county of that name), and Forres (in Morayshire), in sending one member to Parliament; and the county of Inverness returns another representative. The present member for the county is Dr. Donald MacGregor. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-2 numbered 8,479. The lord-lieutenant is Donald Cameron, Esq., of Lochiel. By the returns presented to the Government in 1881, the entire county contained a population of 90,454, and by those for 1891, 88,362; showing a decrease in the ten years of 2,092. The valuation of the county for 1891-2 was (exclusive of railways, which amount to £17,884), £903,215.

ABERNETHY AND KINCARDINE,

WITH NETHY BRIDGE.

ABERNETHY and KINCARDINE are two parishes, but united under the first-mentioned name. It is 4 miles s.w. from Grantown and is bounded on the north by Duthill and Inverallan, on the east by Kirkmichael, and is separated on the south from Braemar by the celebrated Cairngorm mountain; its length is 15 miles, by a breadth of nearly 12. The river Nethy, from which the name is derived, runs through the parish, and falls into the Spey. There are several lochs, the principal being Loch Avon. Cairngorm mountain is one of the loftiest of the Grampians, being 4,050 feet above the sea level, and 1,750 feet from the surface of Loch Avon, which is a mile from its base. It has obtained great celebrity from having furnished large quantities of a particular species of topaz, but which is now nearly exhausted. There is a handsome hotel, viz., the Abernethy Hotel, where travellers and visitors will find first-class accommodation. In the parish are an Established church and one for members of the Free Church, also several public schools. The Earl of Seafield is patron of the parish, which has an area of 78,012 acres. Population in 1881, 1,580, and in 1891, 1,354.

NETHY BRIDGE is a small village in the above parish. There is a station here on the Strathspey line. Population returned with the parish.

BEAULY,

WITH THE PARISHES OF KILMORACK, KILTARLITY, KIRKHILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BEAULY is a village in the extensive parish of KILMORACK, 35 miles s.w. from Tain, 12 w. from Inverness, and 9 s. from Dingwall, standing on the south side of the river of the same name, as it pours into Loch Beaully, an inner branch of the Moray Firth. The situation of this place is beautiful, from the windings and falls of the river, and general appearance of the surrounding country—and hence its name, Beaulieu, that is, "fine place." There is a small harbour, to which vessels of one hundred and fifty tons burthen can come up at high water. The exports chiefly consist of timber, grain and wool; the imports being principally coal and lime. In other respects its trade is of a local character. There are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, established here; and three miles north-east of the town is the Ord distillery. There is a very handsome Roman Catholic cathedral, which adds considerably to the appearance of this neat little village. Verging upon the extremity of the Frith stands the ruins of the priory, founded in the early part of the thirteenth century, and peopled by monks from France, who gave to the place its present name. The venerable remains form an object of curiosity and interest to the tourist, but the falls of Kilmorack are pre-eminent in attraction, and present a scene of great natural beauty. The banks of the river are bold and rocky, and in the course of its windings it divides in such a way as to form the fascinating island of Aigas. There is excellent salmon fishing in the Beaully, and at the falls many are occasionally caught by their leaping on the dry banks in their effort to surmount the cataract. It was formerly recorded that a late Lord Lovat, noticing the frequency of this mistake of that fish, once performed a curious experiment here. He made a fire on the brink of the river, and placed on it a large pot filled with water; speedily a salmon, making a leap in the wrong direction, tumbled into the pot, where it was soon boiled and eaten by his lordship and his attendants; this was done that he might boast in the south of the wonders that existed in the highlands (which were then but little known), and to say that in his country provisions were so abundant that if a fire were made and a pot set on it to boil on the banks of a river, the salmon would of themselves leap into the pot to be boiled! Twomiles further to the westward of the falls may be contemplated the splendid scenery of the valley of the Dhiurn, allowed to surpass any other view in Scotland. Fairs for cattle are held on the Muir of Ord from the month of April to November, both inclusive; they generally occur on the second or third Wednesday in each month, but are regulated by the Falkirk trysts. The parish of Kilmorack has an area of 142,909 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,618; and in 1891, 2,224, of which number Beaully had 907.

KILTARLITY is a parish 3 miles s.w. of Beaully, which is its nearest railway station. In it are Established and Free churches and four public schools. Beaufort Castle, in this parish, is the seat of Lord Lovat. Acreage, 61,896. Population in 1881, 2,184, and in 1891, 1878.

KIRKHILL is a parish 6 miles w. from Inverness. In it are Established and Free churches and public schools. Clunes is the nearest railway station, 1 mile distant. Acreage, 11,335. Population in 1891, 1,307.

BOLESKINE WITH ABERTARFF,

AND THE VILLAGES OF FORT AUGUSTUS, URQUHART, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BOLESKINE with ABERTARFF is an united parish, twenty-four miles in length, and from ten to twelve in breadth, stretching along from the Pass of Inverfargigaig on the south side of Loch Ness to the east end of Loch Oich, embracing the great glen of Stratherrick, Foyers, the famed falls of Foyers, and the village of Fort Augustus, which latter stands on the western extremity of Loch Ness, and on the south bank of the Caledonian Canal, 80 miles N.E. of Fort William, and 83 s.w. from Inverness. This fort, with Fort George on the Moray Firth, and Fort William, are within the county of Inverness, the three forming a line of fortresses which were erected to overawe the Highlanders. The pass of Inverfargigaig is about two miles long, and at some parts is so narrow as to barely permit of the construction of a road. About a mile up the pass is erected a monument in memory of Dr. Bryce, a noted geologist, who was killed whilst in pursuit of his studies. The falls of Foyers are about three miles from Inverfargigaig, on the road passing along the shores of Loch Ness, and the falls of Cullacey and Garry are distant two and eight miles respectively from Fort Augustus. Near the lower Falls of Foyers is the General's Hut (now the Lovat Arms Hotel) called after General Wade, who constructed most of the roads in the Highlands. In the village of Fort Augustus are places of worship for members of the Established and Free Churches, together with a Roman Catholic monastery, erected on the site of the old barracks at Fort Augustus. There are also Established churches at BOLESKINE, GLENURQUHART, and INVERMORISTON. The parish in 1881 had a population of 1,418, and in 1891, 1,429.

CAMPBELTOWN,

ARDERSIER, FORT GEORGE, BETTY, AND CROY.

CAMPBELTOWN is a village in the parish of Ardersier, 31 miles w. from Elgin, 19 w. from Forres, 10 N.N.E. from Inverness, 9½ w. from Nairn, and about a mile from Fort George, which is the nearest railway station. It is situated on the coast of a picturesque bay, and at the foot of an eminence called Cromwell's mount, on the summit of which are the remains of a fortification, and behind the view is very extensive, embracing parts of eight or nine counties. This place, which originated only from the residences of those connected with the garrison, is now a village of some pretensions, possesses many facilities for improvement, and has a strong chalybeate spring, which is much frequented by invalids. Several inns and a public school are in the village. A fair is held annually on the 12th of August. The parish of Ardersier encloses an area of 3,824 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 2,086, and in 1891, 1,914; of this number the village of Campbeltown had 771.

FORT GEORGE, about a mile and a half from Campbeltown, was erected immediately after the year 1746, at an expense of £160,000, in order to keep the Highlanders in check. It covers 15 acres of a level point, projecting into the Moray Firth, the ramparts on three sides rising almost out of the sea; it is said to be one of the most regular fortifications in Britain. It was mounted by eighty cannon, on four bastions, and completely commanded the entrance into the harbour of Inverness. A small pier projects from the fort into the sea, for the use of the ferry boats, which here communicate with the opposite coast of Ross-shire. Population in 1891, 801.

CROY is a parish partly in the county of Inverness and partly in that of Nairn, lying betwixt the river Nairn and the upper arm of the Moray Firth, having Ardersier on the north. There are an Established and a Free church and a public school in the parish, the population of which in 1881 was 1,709, and in 1891, 1,516. The nearest railway station is Fort George, 3 miles distant.

PETTY is a parish with an area of 9,778 acres, and contains an Established and a Free church and two public schools. Dalcross railway station is one mile distant. Population in 1881, 1,531, and in 1891, 1,298.

DUTHIL,

ROTHIEMURCHUS AND CARR BRIDGE.

DUTHIL parish, a portion of which was formerly in Elginshire, but now wholly included in this county, is divided from that of Abernethy by the river Spey. The river Duthil runs through the heart of the parish for nearly twelve miles, and a mile further on acts as a boundary line between this parish and that of Cromdale and the counties of Inverness and Elgin. ROTHIEMURCHUS, once a part of this parish, and still connected with it in civil matters, is now a parliamentary parish lying between the Cairngorm mountain and the Spey, a short way further up the river than the greater part of Duthil; jointly they extend in length twenty miles by a breadth of seventeen. The whole is generally highland in its character, game is plentiful, and there is a considerable quantity of natural wood. The new line of the Highland Railway Company, between Perth and Inverness, passes through the centre of the parish, there being a station at Carr Bridge. The name of Grant is remarkably prevalent in this district. The parish church stands about 7 miles s.w. from Grantown and 24 s.w. from Inverness, and there is a Free church and manse. The population of the parish in 1881 was 1,664, and in 1891, 1,954.

CARR BRIDGE, or, as it is commonly called, the "Bridge of Carr," is a small village in Duthil parish, 20 miles N.N.E. from Kingussie, and 25 s.e. from Inverness. There is a station here on the Highland line. Population in 1891, 374.

FORT WILLIAM,

ARDGOUR, BALLACHULISH NORTH AND SOUTH, BANAVIE, CORRAN FERRY, CORPACH, KILMONIVAIG, AND LAGGAN.

FORT WILLIAM (formerly called Maryburgh and also Gordonsburgh) is a town and seaport, in the parish of KILMALLIE, 133 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 106 N.W. from Glasgow, 65 s.w. from Inverness, and 40 N.N.E. from Oban; situated on the eastern shore and near the head of Loch Linne. It is the seat of a sheriff substitute, with a handsome courthouse at the west end of the town, erected at a cost of over £8,000. The chief industry is that of distilling, but the town is also the centre of a large sheep farming district. Fishing is carried on to a small extent, and it is a place of considerable resort for the tourist and the traveller in the summer months. Communication is maintained with Glasgow and Inverness by the Caledonian and Criban canals daily during the summer, and twice a week in winter, and there is also a steamer daily to and from Oban in connection with the train to and from the south. A line of railway is at present (1892) in course of construction between Glasgow and Fort William, which, when finished, will bring Fort William within 4½ hours journey of Glasgow. The scenery along this line is unsurpassed by any in Scotland, and an entirely new district will be opened up to admirers of Highland scenery. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, a Roman Catholic chapel, and St. Andrew's Episcopal church, begun and finished during the incumbency of the Rev. Canon MacColl, the present rector (1879-82).
It is built on the site of the old church erected in 1817, and the cost —which must have been considerable—has been met by local and outside aid. G. B. Davy, Esq. Spean Lodge, having been one of its most munificent benefactors. The style of architecture is early French Gothic, and the building consists of nave and chancel, tower and spire on the north side of the chancel and a spacious sacristy on the south. Internally the roof is of pine, open to the ridge, of elaborate design, and the whole fittings are of the best description.
The windows throughout are of stained glass, and the church—which is seated for over 250 persons—contains an excellent organ.

There is also a very fine school in connection with this church. A substantial stone quay was erected here in 1831 by the Society for Promoting the British Fisheries, and by subscriptions, at an expense of about £1,500. A suspension bridge of 250 feet span has been erected over the river Lochy by Donald Cameron, Esq. of Lochiel, at a cost of about £3,000. The town consists of a main street, which contains some good buildings, and the branches of the British Linen Co. Bank, the Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. A number of substantial houses have been erected on the hill above the town, and some very handsome villas at the west end. Fort William is governed by Police Commissioners. The sheriff substitute holds a court here every Thursday during the session.

The chief object of attraction in this district is, of course, the majestic Ben Nevis, which is the highest attainable point of Her Majesty's British dominions, being 4,406 feet above the level of the sea. This mountain is visited annually by upwards of 5,000 people, and upon the summit the Scottish Meteorological Society have erected a permanent Observat ry, which was opened in November, 1883, and cost nearly £6,000, raised mainly by public subscription.
Mr. R. T. Omond, F.R.S.E. is the superintendent, with four assistants. The ascent to the top, which used to be very difficult, is now rendered comparatively easy by a winding path or bridle road from the county road at Achintee to the summit, which has been constructed and is kept in repair at a great expense by the directors of the Ben Nevis Observatory. A charge of one shilling is made for each person who makes use of this path in ascending the mountain, and three shillings for each person on horseback. Those who wish to use the path are supposed to provide themselves with the necessary road-permits before starting, and place them in the box kept for that purpose on arriving at the top. These road-permits give the purchaser the privilege of using the visitors' room at the Observatory which is connected with the post office by telegraph, and visitors can send telegrams from the summit, to any part of the world. Many tourists ascend Ben Nevis at evening, in order to see the sun rising in the German Ocean. Should the intrepid adventurer be so fortunate as to attain the topmost region when it is fine, and the view unobscured by clouds or mist, the contemplation of the almost boundless expanse of prospect spread out far beneath his aerial position will amply compensate him for his toil and perseverance. There are now upon the summit very comfortable refreshment rooms, with sleeping accommodation, open during the tourist season. Referring again to the Observatory, observations are recorded there every hour of the day and night, and copies of the daily records are sent to the Meteorological offices at Edinburgh and London, and a daily summary of the weather is telegraphed to the leading daily newspapers. In 1890 the Society established a low level station, at Fort William, where a continuous record of the weather is made by self-recording apparatus, provided by the London Meteorological Council, who also give £250 annually towards its support, the remainder being met by the directors out of contributions of members or public subscriptions. Any person wishing to subscribe to the observatory fund may do so through Mr. R. T. Omond, the superintendent; or to the honorary treasurer Mr. James Sorley.

The fort, from which the town derives its modern name, "Fort William," is a little distance north of the town, and was first founded in 1655 during the protectorate of Cromwell, by the advice and under the direction of General Monk. Part of the ramparts of the fort are still extant. The fort was attacked by the Highland clans under Prince Charles, in 1746, and made a successful defence. The scenery around Fort William is very fine, and the historic interest connected with the district adds additional charm. In the river Lochy, to the north-east of the town, is a long established and sometimes very productive salmon fishery. A mile and a half north-east from Fort William is Inverloch Castle, said to have been founded anterior to the Christian era. Tradition may err in this particular, but it was certainly rebuilt on its present extensive site by an order from the Scottish Government in the reign of Edward I. of England, by one of the Cumyn family; the western tower being still called Cumyn tower. It consists of four large round towers, thirty feet high, connected by a wall, or screen, twenty feet high and ten feet thick, forming a quadrangle of large dimensions; the wall is in a fair state of preservation, but the towers are much decayed. In 1835, the then proprietor, the Marquis of Abercorn, with injudicious taste, enclosed the whole structure at considerable expense. In 1847 was erected at Fort William a handsome obelisk of granite, thirty feet high, by Sir Duncan Cameron, Bart. In 1852 a monument was erected in High street, to the late William Kennedy, Esq. M.D. in commemoration of his professional skill and unwearied benevolence. The Belford Hospital, erected and endowed in 1865, by the late Andrew Belford, of Glenfaintaig, for the inhabitants of Lochaber, is a plain but substantial building, at the east end of the town. It has accommodation for 30 patients. Half a mile from the town is one of the distilleries of Messrs. D. P. McDonald and Sons, another one belonging to the same firm, being situated about two miles from Fort William. They are noted for the manufacture of the famous "Long John" whisky, and give employment to upwards of 200 hands. At the west end of the town Messrs. McDonald have a pier for their own use, and now own two steamers which are constantly employed in carrying material to and from Fort William. First class accommodation is supplied to tourists and commercial gentlemen and families at the Chevalier, Caledonian, Imperial, Ben Nevis, Alexandra, and West End hotels. Fairs are held on the second Wednesdays in June, July, and November. In 1881 the population of the parish of Kilmallie was 4,157, and in 1891, 4,278; Fort William having 1,594 at former date and 1,856 at the latter.

BANAVIE is a hamlet in the parish of Kilmallie, being 3 miles N.E. distant from Fort William, and about one mile from Corpach, beautifully situated on the Caledonian Canal, and steamers going north and south call here daily for passengers. A branch of the new railway from Fort William to Glasgow is being constructed here. The drives and walks in this district are some of the finest in Scotland. The Lochiel Arms Hotel, of which Mr. John Menzies is the proprietor, is a handsome and commodious building, commanding magnificent and extensive views, facing Ben Nevis, and close to the pier. Private families, tourists and others visiting the hotel will find every comfort. The post office stands a little to the left of the hotel. Population in 1891, 241.

LAGGAN is a parish in Badenoch district, measuring from north-east to south-west upwards of 20 miles, and from north to south a little over that number. It contains Loch Laggan, a large sheet of water eight miles in length and one in width. The village is situated between Fort William and Kingussie, on the great north road, by Dalwhinnie and Garvamore, about half way between the two.

Acreage, 150,106. Population in 1881, 917, and in 1891, 850. KILMONIVAIG is a very large parish, 9 miles N.E. of Fort William. The places of worship are Established, Free and Roman Catholic churches. Acreage, 267,071. In 1881 the parish had a population of 1,928, and in 1891, 2,205.

BALLACHULISH NORTH is situated on the north shore of Loch Leven, about 12 miles S. from Fort William. This place has a small neat church of the Establishment, and also Free and Episcopalian churches. The Bishop of Argyle and the Isles has his seat here. In BALLACHULISH SOUTH are productive slate and granite quarries, also marble quarries, but as yet unworked. Not far from the quarries is found valuable limestone, its product possessing superior adhesive qualities. Ballachulish North is united with Corran-Ferry North (in Argyleshire), on the opposite side of Loch Linnhe, in one ecclesiastical parish. In 1881 the population was 749, and in 1891, 757.

CORPACH is a widely-spread, but not very populous, village on the north shore of Loch Eil (in the county of Argyle, but in the same parish as Fort William), 3 miles N. from the Fort; though this village is in Argyleshire, the principal part of the parish of Kilmallie, in which it is situate, is in the county of Inverness, and is surrounded by that county and Loch Eil. Corpach is chiefly to be noticed as being the southern commencement of that great national undertaking, the Caledonian Canal, which here enters Loch Eil by four locks; a little above are eight others, called Neptune's Staircase; they are capable of admitting vessels of three hundred tons (not drawing above twelve feet of water), and each lock rises eight feet. Kilmallie parish church, erected in 1784, is situated about half a mile from the end of the canal, at Corpach. Near the church stands a pyramidal obelisk, of considerable height, with a large tablet of white marble at its base, and an inscription composed by Sir Walter Scott, raised to the memory of Colonel John Cameron, who was slain at the battle of Waterloo, in 1815, while commanding the 92nd Highlanders. The road through Corpach leads to the district of Arisaig, about 35 miles distant, and Moidart, Glenfinnan, and Loch Shiel. At Borradaie, in Moidart, Prince Charles Stuart landed on the 25th of July, 1745. He sailed up Loch Shiel on the 18th of August; the following day he landed and entered Glenfinnan, where he was met by Cameron of Lochiel, and Macdonald of Keppock, with their clansmen. Commemorative of this circumstance, Macdonald of Glenaladale has erected a monument at Glenfinnan. Population in 1891, 340.

ARDGOUR is a small village, 9 miles S. from Fort William, and about 3 miles W. from Ballachulish. It is situated on the north shore of Loch Linnhe, in the county of Argyll, but it is in the parish of Kilmallie, the greater part of which is in Inverness-shire. About a mile west is Ardgour House, the residence of the Macleans of Ardgour, and there are some other fine mansions in the vicinity. The village contains a Post Office, Established Church, Board School, and Mission Room. Population in 1891, 314.

INVERNESS,

DAVIOT WITH DUNLIGHTY, DORES, AND MOY WITH DALAROSSIE.

INVERNESS, the capital of the Highlands, and of the large county of its name, is situated on the banks of the river Ness, near to its confluence with the Beaulie Firth, and commands the eastern approach to the Great Glen of Scotland (Glen-more-na-h-Albyn). The distance by rail from Edinburgh is 195 miles N.N.W., via Fife, and 213, via Stirling; 108½ N. by w. from Aberdeen; 208 N. from Glasgow; 199¼ N.W. from Dundee; 168 S. from Thurso; 144 N.N.W. from Perth; 25 S.W. from Forres; and 37 S.W. from Elgin. We learn from Richard's "Itinerary" (one of the oldest documents extant relative to the affairs of Great Britain, and referring to the period between A.D. 138 and 170) that Inverness was one of the ten cities of Britain enjoying the Jus Latinitatis; only two others in Scotland are mentioned—Perth and Dumbarton. After the Romans withdrew, Inverness became the seat of the Pictish monarchy. Here Macbeth, the great Lord of Ross and Moray, had a castle, which Boethius assigns as the scene of Duncan's murder; Buchanan's relation is to the same effect. Shakspeare's play of "Macbeth" has served to make the place historically famous, though the actual murder may well have occurred in any other of Macbeth's castles. This castle, says the great poet—

"—bath a pleasant seat; the air
Nimble and sweetly recommends itself Unto our gentler senses."

It is supposed to have stood a short distance east of the town, upon an eminence called the "Crown," at the north-east corner of which there are still extensive remains. After the fall of Macbeth, Malcolm Canmore destroyed it, and erected a new castle, which was in existence until 1746, when it was blown up during the rebellion. The handsome County Buildings now stand upon its site.

The situation of Inverness is so singularly beautiful as to have compelled a recognition of its claims to that character, even amid the dry technical details of its great charter; "its good and pleasant situation" is there noticed as one of the reasons for its endowment as a royal burgh. Inverness is a royal burgh of great antiquity, having, it is said, received a charter in 1067 from Malcolm Canmore; and there are on record four charters in its favour from King William the Lion, besides various subsequent ones by several of his successors. Its great, or, as it is called, "golden" charter, is that which was granted by James VI. in 1591, and which confirms previous grants. The municipal government is vested in a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and fourteen councillors, in all twenty-one, who have the management of considerable charitable funds. The burgh, in conjunction with those of Nairn, Forres, and Fortrose, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, the present representative being Gilbert Beith, Esq. The environs of Inverness combine picture-que beauty in detail, with magnificence as a whole—"nuiting," says a tourist, "two opposite qualities and each in the greatest perfection—the characters of a rich, open, lowland country, with those of the wildest Alpine scenery; both being also close at hand, and in many places intermixed; while to all this is added a series of maritime views not often excelled." The walks near the town are deserving of a stranger's perambulation; whether along the banks of the river to the wooded islands of the Ness, or along the sea shore, or by the margin of the canal; or to the singularly-shaped hill of Tomnahurich, or "hill of the fairies" (which, with singular appropriateness has been converted into a cemetery, and now forms one of the finest and most picturesque spots for the purpose in Britain); or to the summit of Craig Phadric (the veneration of which affords matter of speculation to the antiquarian); to the Druidical circles in the "Leys;" to Clava, a literal "City of Tombs," or to Drumossie Moor, where the last of the Stuarts, "Bonnie Prince Charlie," sustained his final defeat, and "the clans of Culloden were scattered in flight;" in each and all of these directions there is much to please and interest the man of taste or science. The eminent lexicographer, Dr. Johnson, in speaking of Inverness, says—"the language of this town has long been considered as peculiarly elegant;" a fact which he ascribes to the intermixture of Cromwell's soldiers with the inhabitants. This is a fanciful hypothesis in many ways, and at once appears hardly reconcilable with the fact that the Gaelic continues to be the prevailing language still spoken by the common people; the soldiers must have learnt the one when they taught the other. A more feasible theory, and one more in accordance with the facts, is that Inverness has always been a centre of education for the north, and has many pretensions to elegance and refinement such as are not found in any other town north of Edinburgh. A large part of its population consists of retired gentlemen, and the aristocracy of the neighbourhood is both numerous and influential. This has had its effect on the inhabitants, who are influenced by the prevailing tone of refinement, and unconsciously appear to reflect it in their manner of speech. The greater part of the town lies on the eastern part of the Ness—a broad, clear, and equably flowing stream—which is here crossed by a new and handsome suspension bridge erected at the expense of the Government, and maintained by an annual assessment levied over the northern counties; this structure, costing £26,000, takes the place of the old stone bridge. The old bridge, consisting of seven arches, erected in 1688, was, on the 25th of January, 1849, carried away by the overflowing of the river, when that portion of the town lying on the west side of it was completely inundated, and the inhabitants compelled to make use of boats to pass through the streets. There are in addition two elegant suspension bridges for foot passengers, the lower of which was opened on the 2nd of May, 1882, by the late Sir Alexander Matheson, Bart., of Lochalsh, M.P.; and a stout wooden traffic bridge at the lower part of the town. The principal streets in the business parts of the town are Union street, immediately opposite the railway station, which, though not of great length, is much admired for its uniformity and handsome appearance; High street, Church street, Academy street, Castle street, and Bridge street, which contain many fine public buildings and places of business.

Amongst the public buildings we must first mention the Castle of Inverness, being pre-eminent as much for its architectural beauty as for its commanding position. This modern edifice was built in 1836 upon the site of the old castle erected by Malcolm Canmore, as before mentioned, at a cost of £10,000, for the accommodation of the county courts and the courts of judicature in the northern circuit, and for the preservation of the records and transactions of the judicial business of the county. It is built from the design of Mr. Burn, architect, Edinburgh, after the old English castellated style, and harmonises well, from its varied projecting and retreating masses, its square and round towers, with the outline of the surrounding scenery. It contains a courtroom, a commodious county hall, and various suitable apartments for judicial business and the convenience of the different functionaries connected therewith. The court house is adorned with a splendid painting, by Raeburn, of the late Charles Grant, of Glenelg, long M.P. for the county; and in a niche of the staircase is a beautiful bust, by the late Patrick Park, R.S.A., of the late William Fraser-Tytler, of Aldouie, many years sheriff and convener of the county. Being the seat of the sheriff of the county, the courts of that functionary are held here. The sheriff's ordinary court is held every Thursday and the small debt court every Friday during session time, for the recovery of sums not exceeding £12; and a justice of peace court is held monthly for adjudicating claims not exceeding £5 in amount. Her Majesty's Prison adjoins the court house buildings, and its castellated style is much admired. Another important building, completed in 1884, is the extensive range of military barracks erected by Government on the Hut of Health, situated about a mile to the north-east of the town. The barracks, which cost about £50,000, were built in consequence of the new arrangement of the county into regimental districts, by which Inverness became the head-quarters of its territorial regiment. The regimental district is No. 79, and is the head-quarters of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, the depot being at Fort George, situated 12 miles from Inverness. Among the other public buildings, &c. (exclusive of edifices for divine worship), is the Working Men's Club, situated in Bridge street, a handsome and commodious new building which owes its origin and present position to the great liberality and untiring exertions of the late Donald McDouall, Esq. Dunolly Cottage. It possesses an extensive library, inclusive of a contribution of books received from Her Majesty the Queen; it also contains a reading room, billiard room and lecture hall, and is held in trust by the Town Council for the behoof of the community. The suburbs of the town—Millburn, Midmills, The Crown, Drummond, Lower Drummond, and Ballferry—have extended very much during the past few years and contain many handsome villas, attesting the taste and skill of the local architects.

To the late Mr. Grant, of Bught, the community are mainly indebted for the handsome new Town Hall, which occupies the site of the old structure facing the Exchange. In 1873, Mr. Grant bequeathed £5,000 for the purpose of aiding in its erection, and the foundation stone was accordingly laid in 1878, by Mr. Alexander Simpson, then provost of the burgh. The style of architecture is early decorated Gothic, with details of a French character. The building occupies an area of about 700 square yards, with a frontage of 73 feet to High street. It is mainly two storeys in height, the different floors being well marked by base and string courses, and the wall head finished at a height of 47 feet by an ornamental parapet. The centre portion has a richly ornamented gable flanked by round towers, and an oak spirelet surmounts the whole. The town's arms occupy the middle of the portion over the centre window. The Castle street elevation has a shop on the ground floor, and four trefoil head windows similar to those in the front elevation, above which are three large double light windows, with arched tops and carved capitals. In front is the main staircase lighted by three windows, the rear filled with stained glass containing the town's arms, the royal arms, and the Scottish arms respectively, and on either side of the staircase on the ground floor are the offices of the town clerk and town chamberlain. The Town Hall is 66 feet long 35 feet broad and 33 feet high; the ceiling is of pitch pine panelled and richly decorated with heraldic emblems. Above the centre of the three doorways is the orchestral gallery with musicians' room behind. The hall is lighted by fourteen windows filled with stained glass bearing the arms of the Highland clans. The central stained glass window was the gift of Mrs. Warrand, of Bught. The end windows show subjects representing Arts, Science, Law, Agriculture, Education, Literature, Arms of the Corporate Trades of the burgh, and the Royal and Scottish Arms. The hall contains portraits of the late Prince Consort, and Duncan Forbes, of Culloden, James Robertson of Aultnashach, and Sir Henry C. Macandrew, former provosts; a fine copy of Ramsay's original portrait of Flora Macdonald, President Forbes, Hector Munro, of Fowles, some time M.P. for the burgh, and a bust of the late Rev. Dr. Macdonald of the High Church, by A. Davidson, an Inverness sculptor of more than local fame, and also a bust of the late Dr. Carruthers, by Alexander Munro. The work in the various windows was executed by Messrs. Adam and Small, of Glasgow, and the vestibule paving, &c., by Messrs. W. Hawley and Co. of Edinburgh. A residence for the janitor occupies the top of the building, the council chamber the west end of the Castle street elevation, and the provost's room the east end or Castle street elevation. The furniture was specially designed by the architects, the provost's chair being made of oak richly carved. The building was formally opened by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, on the 19th January, 1882, and cost about £15,000. A handsome fountain, the gift of Dr. George Forbes, occupies the front of the Exchange. Underneath the fountain rests the time honoured palladium of the burgh, Clachnacuddin. Sir Walter Scott calls this stone the Charter Stone of the Burgh, and in "Anderson's Guide" it is said "natives of Inverness in all parts of the world turn with fond affection to friends round the Clachnacuddin." The word is Celtic and means the "stone of the tubs," for it was here the young women used to rest their tubs when coming from the river Ness, and around it the old burghers gathered for their social talk.

The Highland Club House, in High street, a commodious and substantial structure, and originally an hotel, greatly adds to the appearance of the street. The Young Men's Christian Association, at the corner of High street and Castle street is an ornamental building, costing about £3,500, and consists of library, hall, and class rooms. A fine new theatre has been erected on the east side of the river in Bank street, the architects being Messrs. Mathews and Lawrie, Inverness. The Free Library, Museum, and School of Science and Art, situated in Castle wynd, was completed at a cost of £3,800, and was opened on the 14th October, 1881, by Joseph Mitchell, Esq. of Viewhill. It consists of library, museum, class rooms, and curator's house. The library contains 5,000 volumes, and, as its name signifies, is free, being supported by a small rate levied on the owners and occupiers of property in the town. At the head of Bridge street a handsome spire attracts attention; this was the site of the former gaol, which was surmounted by this spire, rising to a height of 130 feet, and erected in 1701. This town is the chosen and favourite head-quarters of the Northern Meeting held annually in September, composed of noblemen and gentlemen in the northern counties, associated for the purpose of fostering the games and sports peculiar to the Highlands. They have large and elegant rooms in Church street set apart for that purpose, and a pavilion and park. The Inverness Farmers' Society, and numerous other institutions, hold their meetings in the town at stated periods. The town is also the head-quarters of two battalions of infantry (militia and volunteers), and a brigade of volunteer artillery. The militia are mostly raised among the sturdy fishermen on the west coast and isles, but the town alone contributes 800 volunteers between artillery and infantry, a very respectable figure in proportion to the number of inhabitants.

The Northern Infirmary, erected in 1803, and situated on the west bank of the river, between the Ness Islands and the town, is a large and well-constructed building, with an imposing exterior. The Inverness Forbes Dispensary for the sick poor, in Huntly street, is also a good building, supported by voluntary contributions. The Northern Counties Institute for the Blind, situated on Hill terrace, is an old school building, which was purchased from the School Board on the erection of a new school in the same quarter, and converted into a commodious home for blind persons in the northern counties. It contains dining hall, class rooms, workshop, dormitories, and matron's and servants' rooms, and was opened in March, 1881. The cost of the building and re-construction would be about £2,000, and it has accommodation for 18 blind persons. In it the blind are taught to read and write, and do various descriptions of fancy and other work. Four educational institutions must be noticed as highly efficient in the benefits they confer. The College, situated on the west side of the town, founded in 1873, originally cost over £9,000, and was designed by Mr. Alexander Ross, of Inverness. The Royal Academy, a liberally-endowed institution, in Academy street, was established in 1792, for the purpose of supplying a high education to the inhabitants of Inverness and the surrounding country, and was a few years ago much extended and improved. In 1863 important changes were effected in the organisation of the school, in order to do away with the conflicting interests of several independent masters, and to enable the directors to offer to the pupils the advantages of a systematic course of instruction. At the same time the former building, which is now used by the boys alone, underwent extensive repairs and alterations by which its comfort and convenience have been much increased. The present arrangements were completed in 1865, by the erection of a new building for the accommodation of girls. The Farraline Park Institution, or Bell's School, was established in 1842, by bequest of the late Dr. Bell, LL.D. of Madras, for the benefit of the middle and humbler class of children, who are instructed in all the useful branches of an English education; their number is generally about five hundred. The premises form an elegant building, in an open and airy situation on the east side of the town in Margaret street, off Academy street. The front is embellished by a beautiful row of fluted columns. The High Public School, situated on Kingsmills road, and erected at a cost of about £8,000, is managed by the local School Board. The other board schools are complete and commodious structures.

The religious edifices comprise the High Parish church, Church street, an ancient structure with tower and spire; and the Gaelic Parish church, also in the same street; West Parish church, Huntly street; Free High church, Bank street, a modern erection, with an imposing spire; North Free church, now (1893) in course of erection in Bank street; East Free church, Academy street; West Free church, Upper Kessock street; United Presbyterian church, Union street; Independent chapel, Fraser street; Wesleyan Methodist chapel, Inglis street; Roman Catholic chapel, Huntly street; Episcopal chapel (St. John's), Church street; and St. Andrew's Episcopal Cathedral, Ardross street, an imposing structure, the foundation stone of which was laid October 17th, 1886, by the late Dr. Longley, Archbishop of Canterbury; it was opened for divine service in September, 1889. The building is in the decorated Gothic style, and has, with all its furniture and fittings throughout, been executed from the designs of Mr. Alexander Ross, Inverness. The following are the principal dimensions:—Length of nave, 90 feet; choir and chancel, 60 feet; width of nave, 60 feet; 30 feet between the columns and 15 feet in each of the aisles. External dimensions:—166 feet long by 72 feet across west front; height of towers, 100 feet; spire 100 feet; total, 200 feet; height to ridge of roof, 88 feet. The contractors for building, carving, and every other particular were almost exclusively tradesmen of Inverness. The transepts are arranged after the old Scotch model, to project slightly beyond the aisles. Externally, the building exhibits a nave, with aisles, transepts, and apsidal chancel of equal height. At the west end are situated two towers, each for the present without spires, but carried up to the spring of spires, a height of 100 feet; the ultimate height being nearly 200 feet. The north tower contains a fine peal of bells, the cost of which was defrayed by public subscription a private donations—and testimony to the esteem in which the late bishop of the diocese, Dr. Eden, Primus, was held by all classes of the community. At the north-east angle is the octagonal chapter house. The cathedral is built of a light-red sandstone from Conon quarry, near Dingwall, the dressings being of a warm cream tint freestone from Coveasa, near Elgin. The north tower forms a side entrance through a porch in its base, and in the south tower is the baptistry; the main entrance being situated in the west front between the towers. This entrance opens into a cloister, formed into a handsome stone screen, extending across the end of the nave from tower to tower, thus forming a vista through the north porch, cloister, and baptistry, the breadth of the building. The screen is fitted with clear plate glass, adding much to the general interior effect, and admitting of a full view of the cathedral, without actually entering within the part set aside for divine worship. The cost of this beautiful building was over £20,000. A list of the officiating ministers for the whole will be found under the head of "Public Buildings," in the Directory.

COMMERCE, TRADE, &c.—At the town harbour and Thornbush quay, and also at the Caledonian Canal wharves, within a mile of the town, vessels of considerable tonnage may receive or discharge their cargoes, while large ships have excellent anchorage in Kessock roads, just above the confluence of the river with the sea. The exports from this port are chiefly grain, potatoes, wool, timber, salmon, &c. The imports comprise timber, Archangel tar, guano, and wheat. There are ship and boat building yards, three manufactories for woollen cloths, a tobacco manufactory, two breweries, several aerated water manufactories, two iron foundries, and two distilleries, one of which (the Inverness Distillery) is situated at Millburn, close to the new military barracks; the other (the Glen Albyn) at the Caledonian Canal basin, where there is every facility for carrying on an extensive trade of this description. There are no fewer than nine banking companies established in Inverness, and a savings bank; these are noticed under their proper head in the Directory of the town. The premises of the Caledonian Bank, erected in 1849, form a very handsome building on the north side of High street; it is of freestone, having a row of elegant Corinthian columns in front, and is highly ornamental to the locality in which it stands. The shops in Inverness are well supplied with goods of every description, and are resorted to not only by the inhabitants of the immediate vicinity, but also by those of remoter districts, and by many from the contiguous counties. The following newspapers are issued from the press of Inverness:—The Courier, on Tuesday and Friday; the Northern Chronicle on Wednesday, the Highland News on Saturday, and the Scottish Highlander on Thursday. The Celtic Magazine is also published on the first of each month. During the summer months large numbers of visitors come to the town, accommodation for whom can easily be found in the large and handsome hotels which Inverness is noted to contain. Principal among these are the Station Hotel, adjoining the railway station; the Royal, opposite the railway station; the Caledonian, in Church street; the Waverley Temperance Hotel, in Union street; the Imperial, in Academy street, and the Palace Hotel and the Victoria, on Ness walk. Inverness being the centre to which the principal lines of road in the Highlands converge—having the Caledonian Canal on the one hand, and the Moray Firth on the other—maintains a rapid, frequent, and easy intercourse, both by land and water, with all parts of the kingdom. It is also the head-quarters of the Highland Railway, whose large works afford employment to about a thousand artisans, besides numerous officials. It is in regular communication by rail with Wick and Thurso in the north; with Strone Ferry, the terminus of the Dingwall and Skye railway on the west coast (from which the company's steamers sail to Portree in Skye, and MacBrayne's steamers to Stornoway, Glasgow, &c.), and with Aberdeen, Perth, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and the rest of the kingdom.

MARKETS AND FAIRS.—The Beaully, or Muir or Ord, are the most important cattle fairs, and are held on the Muir of Ord, on the third Thursday of January; on the third Thursday of February; the third Wednesday and Thursday of March; the third Wednesday and Thursday of April; the second Wednesday and Thursday of May; the third Wednesday and Thursday of June; the second Thursday of July, for half bred sheep; and the third Wednesday and Thursday for sheep and cattle; on the Wednesday and Thursday before Falkirk in August; the Wednesday and Thursday before Falkirk in September; the Wednesday and Thursday before Falkirk in October; the Wednesday and Thursday before Edinburgh Hollow fair in November; and the Thursday after the third Wednesday in December. At all the markets, Wednesday is the principal day for the sale of sheep and lambs, and is held exclusively for that purpose; and Thursday for the sale of cattle, horses, sheep, pigs, &c. The Inverness markets are held on Friday following the Muir of Ord markets. According to the census returns for 1881, Inverness contained a population of 17,385, and by those for 1891, 19,214. KINGUSSIE, ALVIE, LAGGAN, DALWHINNIE, NEWTONMORE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KINGUSSIE, the Gaelic name of which is the termination of the "Pine Forest," is the name of a parish and beautiful village, 44 miles s. from Inverness, and 73 n. from Perth, on the great road between the two towns, and 50 miles n.e. from Fort William. It is the capital of the once renowned lordship of Badenoch, and previous to the year 1864 was all but inaccessible to the general public. By the opening of the Inverness and Perth Junction, now designated the Highland Railway, the beautiful and mountainous scenery of the district is now within easy reach of the tourist, and from the number who have already visited it, it promises to become a favourite resort. The district in which the village is situated is nearly in the centre of the Highlands of Scotland, where the genuine race of the Gael and their original language existed at one time in its purity. The inhabitants in the time of war are fond of military life, and the 42nd and 92nd Highland regiments included men from this quarter; the late Duke of Gordon being the popular colonel of these corps for many years. The commissioners of roads and bridges, in prosecution of their liberality towards the Highlands of Scotland, opened a beautiful new line of road from Kingussie to Fort William, by Loch Laggan, through part of the remains of the ancient Caledonian forest, and in sight of the famed parallel roads in Glenroy. A more romantic route for the traveller than this by Loch Laggan is rarely to be seen. The Duke of Abercorn erected a costly and beautiful shooting establishment (Ardverikie Lodge) on the banks of the lake, in which Her Majesty resided for about six weeks in the year 1846; it is now occupied by Sir John W. Ramsden, Bart., the proprietor. Another improvement in this district was effected by the erection of a substantial wooden bridge over the Spey, which previously was only crossed by a ferry. The village stands on the north bank of the river, not far from the north base of the Grampian hills, in sight of Cairngorm, famous for its transparent stones, and Ben Macdui, one of the loftiest mountains in Britain. The village contains a county building, in which the justices of peace courts for the district of Badenoch are held, and a sheriff small debt court is held in January, May and September.

The places of worship are the Established church, a Free church, built in 1877, and capable of accommodating a large congregation; and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are three burial grounds in the place, two of which are known of be of great antiquity, the walls of the places of worship being still visible. One of the cemeteries is named after St. Columbus, and is said to have been originally dedicated to that holy personage. On the south bank of the river, opposite the village, stand the ruins of Ruthven Castle, which was a barrack in the reign of George II., and burnt down in 1745. It was a place of great antiquity and note, having been the residence and castle of Walter Cumming, Lord of Badenoch, and his ancestors, who at one period lorded over almost all the Highlands of Scotland. Walter Cumming's oppression and tyranny became so intolerable to all within his power, which was very extended, that the Clan Chattan (M'Pherson) threw off the yoke, and expelled the tyrant from the country; for which deed of valour they acquired the red hand and dagger, in addition to their coat of arms. Ruthven Castle was the rallying point of those brave but deluded heroes of 1745-6. Here they assembled after the battle of Culloden, in considerable strength and high spirits, eager and anxious to be again led against the Duke of Cumberland. Balls and merriment were kept up by the officers and men, for several nights, while expresses were despatched in quest of the Prince, who was found wandering in the mountains and making for the Hebrides, sunk in spirits and in deep despair, returning the answer to his faithful adherents "that all was over with him." Their loss at Culloden was nothing compared to the depression this caused to their spirits by disappointment. From that moment they dispersed, broken hearted, to meet no more. Three miles east of the village is Belleville House, the seat of C. B. J. M'Pherson, Esq. and built by James M'Pherson, Esq., translator of some of Ossian's poems, &c. Near to the house and roadside is a neat monument to the memory of the "bard of Morven;" and half-way between it and the village, a little off the road, is to be seen a cave of great antiquity and curiosity, worth the stranger's notice. Eight miles south-west of Kingussie, on the Fort William road, stands Cluny Castle, the seat of Brigadier-General Ewen M'Pherson, the chief of the Clan Chattan. Eight miles to the east, close to the Spey, and in a favourite spot, the romantic vale of Kiurara, are interred the remains of the late Duchess of Gordon, and on a rock in the same vale has been erected a beautiful monument of granite, 90 feet high, to the memory of the late Duke; it was raised by subscription, amounting to about £1,200. About five miles from Kingussie, on the Perth road, is Invernavay Moor, celebrated for a hard-fought battle between the clans Macintosh and Cameron, and in which Cluny and the M'Phersons ultimately interfered, the consequences of which gave occasion, sixteen years afterwards, for the bloody contest between thirty M'Phersons and the same number of Davidsons, on the North Inch of Perth, in presence of King Robert III. of Scotland and his Court, from which eleven of the former and only one of the latter returned alive, and all seriously wounded. Partial notice of this memorable event is to be found in Sir Walter Scott's "Fair Maid of Perth." The hills of Badenoch are nowhere surpassed for the abundance of all sorts of game to be found amongst them, which brings a great number of noblemen and gentlemen to the country during the shooting season. John Leslie, the celebrated Bishop of Ross, in Scotland, was a natural son of the parson of Kingussie, in Badenoch, and born there in 1527. He was educated at the University of Aberdeen, and in 1547 was made a canon of the cathedral. He was the principal opponent of John Knox. The Police Act was adopted in 1867, and since that time the valuation of property has doubled. Water has been introduced by gravitation, at a considerable cost, and the natural beauty of the place much improved; hence it has been selected by many as a place of summer resort. There are several fairs held at Kingussie during the year, but the days for holding are for the most part regulated by the Beaulie and Falkirk fairs. Acreage of the parish 114,049. Population in 1881, 1,987, and in 1891, 1,948.

LAGGAN is a parish in the district of Badenoch, extending from north-east to south-west upwards of 20 miles. It is bounded by Boleskine on the north, Kingussie on the east, by the mountains of Perthshire on the south, and by Kilmorivag on the west. The river Spey, which takes its rise from a very small lake of the same name in the western part of the parish, runs through here in an easterly direction, receiving in its course the waters of the Maslie and Trium, both of which have their rise in the Grampians. Loch Laggan, a beautiful lake, extending about eight miles in length by one in breadth, lies on the south-west extremity of the parish. There are three places of worship in the parish—a church of the Establishment, a Free Church, and a Roman Catholic chapel; there are also two public schools. Newtonmore is the nearest railway station, seven miles distant. Acreage 152,239. Population in 1881, 917, and in 1891, 850.

DALWHINNIE, which is surrounded with beautiful scenery and lochs, is situated on the heights of the forest of Badenoch, on the Highland road to Inverness from the south; it is 56½ miles from Inverness, and 99½ from Edinburgh. There is a station here on the Highland line.

ALVIE is a parish in the Badenoch district, bounded on the south by the Grampians, and on the west by Kingussie, the nearest stations being Aviemore and Kingcraig, each about 3 miles distant. The principal inhabited portions lie along the rivers Spey and Feshie. There are Established and Free churches, and a public school in the parish, which has an area of 86,613 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 707, and in 1891, 656.

NEWTONMORE is a village in Kingussie parish, and a station on the Highland line. Population returned with the parish.

PORTREE,

EIGG, RAASAY, RONA, BARRA, BRACADALE, DURINISH, HARRIS, GLENELG, KILMUIR, LOCHMADDY, NORTH AND SOUTH UIST, SLEAT, SNIZORT, STRATH, AND NUMEROUS SMALL ISLES.

PORTREE is a parish in the island of Skye. The village of Portree is the principal one in the parish of the adjacent isles, and is a flourishing little seaport, about 210 miles from Inverness by Oban, 181 by Beaulieu, Dingwall, and Strome Ferry, and 109 by Invermoriston and Shiel House, 74 n. from Tobermory, 21 e. from Dunvegan, and 24 n.w. from Broadford. It is reached by steamer from Oban, or by rail by Dingwall, Garve, Auchinault, Auchnasheen and Jeantown to Strome Ferry; and thence by railway steamer. The village is seated a little above the shore, at the summit of a somewhat steep acclivity, thickly planted with thriving trees. It is of some business, has three banking establishments, a woollen manufactory in the vicinity, and four good hotels and posting houses. In the mill, which was erected in 1850, are manufactured tweeds, plaids, yarns, and carpets. The quay, erected in 1819, has recently been much improved by Lord Macdonald (who owns this part of the town), at a cost of £9,000; it is now suitable for trading steamers and ships at all states of the tide. The tide rises from twelve to sixteen feet; the bay is safe and spacious, having a depth of from five to twelve fathoms, and the anchorage is excellent. On a high rocky promontory, projecting some distance into the bay, at whose base the quay is erected, stands an octagonal tower, built in 1834, by Dr. Alexander McLeod, from which there is a splendid view of the surrounding scenery. On the west of the village, amidst some thriving plantations, stands Portree House, belonging to Lord Macdonald. A sheriff court is held every Thursday during session. The votes of the county electors in Skye for a member of Parliament for Inverness-shire are taken at Portree, Broadford, Uig and Dunvegan. The chief exports are sheep, black cattle, wool, salt herrings, salmon (chiefly for London), and cod and ling, both salt and dry, principally for Glasgow and Liverpool. The entire parish of Portree has an area of 56,909 acres, and contained a population in 1881 of 3,191, and in 1891, 3,176.

SKYE is an extensive island on the western coast of Scotland, forming no inconsiderable portion of the county of Inverness, being the largest of the Western isles, with the exception of Lewis. It is 46 miles from north to south, and 27 from east to west in a direct line; but the parliamentary road, commencing at Armadale in the south, and running chiefly on the eastern coast to Uig in the north, is 72 miles long; and there is a cross road extending 9 miles still further in the latter direction. The general face of the country is mountainous, which, although it may be inviting to the tourist from the sublime scenery it presents, is a great barrier to the successful operations of the husbandman; and the island cannot be called fertile, if we except the narrow strips of land in the valleys, and some parts near the coast. The eastern part of the island is separated from Glenelg, on the mainland, by a narrow sound called the Kyles of Skye. The island belongs to a number of proprietors, and is principally occupied in grazing farms, producing great numbers of sheep and black cattle and some small horses, but a large portion of the land is rented by what are termed crofters, who combine farming and fishing for a livelihood. In 1884 an agitation arose amongst them for thorough revision of the terms on which they hold the land, the crofters going to the extreme measure of defying the law officers, supported by the military, who were enforcing the demands of the land owners. The agitation caused such a popular feeling on their behalf that a land bill, considerably in their favour, was passed by Parliament. This, with the aid of emigration, will, it is hoped, do something to ameliorate their position. Formerly great quantities of kelp were made here. Eight miles south of Portree, in the district known as "MacLeod's country," may be contemplated some of the finest and most beautifully varied mountain scenery in the Highlands. This part abounds with game; and lake and river angling may here be successfully pursued by the tourist, and refreshment and accommodation obtained at the Sligichan Inn, situated at the base of the celebrated Cuchullin (pronounced Coolin) Hills. Dunvegan Castle, once the princely residence of the chief of the Macleods, is distant 21 miles from Portree, but it is here noticed as one of the most ancient structures of the Highlands; it has been repaired and fitted up at a great expense. Not far from the castle is a convenient inn. In proceeding to Portree, from the south is seen, from the deck of the steamer, Armadale Castle, the seat of Lord Macdonald, agreeably situated near the shore, at the south-east corner of the island, amidst thriving plantations and sheltering woods. The fisheries off this coast, especially in the sound between Skye and the mainland, are sometimes very productive. The coasts are indented with many fine and secure ports, the principal of which are Portree and Broadford on the east, the Isle of Ornsay on the south, and Dunvegan and Stein on the north. At Bradford a stone pier, 700 feet long, was completed in 1892, at a cost of £10,000, and affords splendid accommodation for vessels; it was erected by the Fishery Board, through the aid of a loan from Lord Macdonald. The parish of Portree also comprises the isles of PLADDA, RAASAY, and RONA.

The peculiar features of Skye are its romantic views, its mountain and water scenery, the charming seats with which the country is studded, as seen from different points, and some natural curiosities in certain localities. A particular notice of all the places worthy of a stranger's visit would occupy more space than we could devote to the subject. We cannot, however, omit noticing the small lake of Coruisk, about 10 miles south-west from Broadford, whose sides rise almost perpendicularly from its deep black waters to a great height; also a spar cave on the coast of Strathard; and about 7 miles north of Broadford and Storr Rock is exhibited one of the most grand and imposing scenes in Scotland. This is a mountain 7 miles north of Portree, whose summit is fully 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, the eastern side being a grand precipice of bare rugged rock, often rising perpendicularly 500 feet. But the most remarkable feature about it, and which renders it dissimilar to any other mountain, are several detached pyramids, or almost perpendicular columns of rock, varying from 300 feet to nearly 500 feet in height; some standing at a considerable distance from the mountain, and appearing as though the intermediate parts, being too soft to resist the influence that acted upon them, had crumbled away, leaving the harder materials as a monument of their ability to resist the ravages of time and raging of the tempest. One of these isolated spiral masses of rock rises 165 feet from the base, and 240 feet in circumference; it seems at a distance to stand on an apex, from which one might imagine it would be easy to remove it; indeed, the spectator cannot divest himself of the apprehension that it would fall upon him should he approach too near. The scene is altogether grand and imposing, and must be visited to be appreciated. The fairs in Skye are held as follow:—Skye: May—Broadford cattle, Thursday after last Tuesday; Portree cattle, last Tuesday. August—Broadford cattle, Thursday after third Tuesday; Portree cattle, third Tuesday; Sligichan, Monday before Portree. September—Broadford cattle; Thursday after third Tuesday; Sligichan cattle, third Tuesday; North and South Uist; May—South Uist, Wednesday before Portree; North Uist, Friday before Portree. July—South Uist, Friday after Inverness sheep and wool market; North Uist, Friday after South Uist. September—South Uist, Wednesday week before Sligichan; North Uist, Friday week before Sligichan. By the census returns for 1881, the island of Skye contained a population of 17,789, and by those for 1891, 17,401.

EIGG, or Egg, is a small island in the Hebrides, belonging to Inverness-shire, about 12 miles s.w. of the promontory of Sleat, the most southern point of Skye. It is about 3 miles long from north to south, surmounted on the southern extremity by a perpendicular wall or rampart called the Scur of Eigg, composed of pitchstone porphyry columns, running about a mile in length nearly east and west, from 300 to 400 feet broad, and from 350 to 400 feet high, the summit being about 1,940 feet above the level of the sea. The Scur is distinctly columnar, the pillars generally being about a foot in diameter, though there is a stratum of columns at the east end, inclining towards the horizon, whose diameters are from 2½ to 3 feet. The appearance of this singularly grand production of nature from every point is indescribably magnificent, and when viewed from the east end assumes the form of a stupendous ruined tower. At the base of the rocks, on the north and south sides, several large caves have been formed by the softer parts of the rock crumbling away; the bases of the columns above form the ceiling of these caves, and, as in Staffa, presents a resemblance to the surface of honeycombs. Two steamboats pass here on their way to Portree and return every week in summer. Population in 1881, 291, and in 1891, 436.

RAASAY, or Razny, is an island of the Hebrides, belonging to the parish of Portree, about 13 miles long and 2 broad, lying to the east of Skye, opposite Portree, separated from it by the sound of Raasay, about 4 miles wide. It is the property of Mrs. Wood, of Raasay, who has a fine mansion in a bay near the south-western extremity of the island. There are other islands in the neighbourhood of Skye; as SCALPA to the east, ROM and CANNA to the south-west, &c. Population in 1881, 478, and in 1891, 670.

RONA, or Ronay, is an island of the Hebrides, lying at the northern extremity of Raasay, from which it is separated by a strait just passable for vessels. It is about 4 miles in length by one in breadth. The little arable ground which occurs in Rona surrounds the scattered village which lies at the bottom of the bay, and contains nearly all the population of the island, who in 1881 numbered 176, and in 1891, 158. There is a very fine lighthouse here.

BARRA is an island parish, in the south of the western isles. It contains the post office village of CASTLEBAR, and includes the isle of BARRA, BERNERAY, FLODDAY, FRIDAY, HELLISAY, MINGALAY, PABBAY, SANDERAY, and WATERSAY. The island is about 6 miles long by a width of 3, and contained in 1881 a population of 1,869, and in 1891, 2,865.

BRACADALE is a parish in the isle of Skye, about 17 miles long by a width of about 5; it also includes the isles of HAVERSAY, ORANSAY, SOAY, and VUAY. The whole parish is the property of Macleod, of Macleod. Population in 1881, 929, and in 1891, 920.

DURINISH is a parish in the isle of Skye, 17 miles long by a width of 13, including in its limits the isles of WATERNISH, STEIN, and ISSAY. Population in 1881, 4,310, and in 1891, 3,933.

HARRIS is a parish in the south end of Lewis Island, in size about 20 miles long by a width of about 8. It includes the isles of ANABICH, BERNERA, ENSAY, FLODDAY, KILLIGRAY, PABBAY, SCALPAY, SCARP, SCOTSWAY, ST. KILDA, TARRENSAY, and other small isles. Post town, Portree. Population in 1881, 1,814, and in 1891, 5,024.

KILMUIR is a parish in North Skye, 16 miles long by a width of about 8. Post town, Portree. Population in 1881, 2,562, and in 1891, 2,409.

NORTH UIST is a parish and island situated between Harris and Benbecula, Western Isles. It is about 17 miles long by a width of from 3 to 13 miles, and includes in its jurisdiction the village of LOCHMADDY, and the isles BALESARE, and ILLEBRAY, ROVERAY, GRIMSAY, HEISKER, KIRKIBOST, LEVERA, MHORGAY, RONAY and VALLAY. Post town, Lochmaddy. Population in 1881, 4,264, and in 1891, 4,187.

SOUTH UIST is a parish and island 7 miles south of North Uist; its length is about 21 miles by a width of about 7. The isles of BENBECULA, ERISKY, PLADDA, GRIMSAY, and VIAY are in this parish. Post town, Oban. Population in 1881, 6,078, and in 1891, 5,821.

SLEAT is a parish on the south-east side of Skye; in size it is about 21 miles long by a width of about 3. ORNSAY ISLAND is included in the parish. Post town, Broadford. Population in 1881, 2,060, and in 1891, 1,850.

SNIZORT is a parish on the north-west side of Skye; its length is about 10 miles, and breadth about 6, with a very rocky coast. Population in 1881, 2,120, and in 1891, 1,893.

STRATH, or Strathsworde, is a parish on the south-east side of Skye, with a length of 23 miles by a breadth of about 7. It contains the post office village of BROADFORD and KYLEAKIN. It includes PABBAY and SCALPAY islands. Population in 1881, 2,016, and in 1891, 2,392.

KINCARDINESHIRE,

OCCASIONALLY called the MEARNS (and improperly Mearn-shire) is a small county on the eastern coast; bounded on the north and north-west by Aberdeenshire, on the east by the North Sea, and the south and south-west by Forfarshire. Its form describes nearly that of a triangle, having to the sea its principal or most extensive base, which reaches along the coast from the bay of Aberdeen to the mouth of the North Esk river, about thirty miles; its greatest breadth inland being twenty-two. The contents of its area are stated to be 383 square miles, or 245,346 acres, of which about five square miles are foreshore, and three lake and water. In size, Kincardine is the twenty-first of the Scottish counties, and in population the twenty-fifth.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—The shire takes its name from Kincardine, formerly a small town in the parish of Fordoun, and which was the seat of the county courts, &c. until the year 1600, when they were removed to Stonehaven. Kincardine, which has dwindled to a mere hamlet, was formerly connected with an ancient seat of royalty called Kincardine Castle, of which only the foundation of the walls can now be traced. The phrase Mearns, before referred to, after strict investigation, is in all probability merely of local meaning; but it is generally said to have been affixed to this part of Scotland from its having become the property of Mernia, a brother of King Kenneth II., another brother called Angus conferring his name upon the neighbouring county of Forfar. In former times the hollow of the Mearns was the only passable access to the north of Scotland, owing to the hills occupying uninterruptedly all the rest of the breadth inland, except at this point, and it was the common passage for armies going to and fro since the earliest periods of history; yet unless the great battle between Gaiacus and Agricola took place here, as some historians aver, this county has not been the theatre of any extraordinary events, nor the scene of any great military achievements. The peasantry of the shire have always been considered a very able and industrious race of men; and the "men of the Mearns" is a proverbial expression of old date—implying trustworthiness and integrity.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, &c.—The county is almost exclusively of an agricultural character, for although it has the advantage of so extensive a range of sea coast, it possesses no harbour of any commercial importance. The soil of Kincardine is of a very productive kind, and is cultivated in a style nowhere surpassed in Scotland; a sufficient proof of this is the fact that all the lands in tillage nearly a seventh part it devoted to the culture of the turnip. The other crops raised are wheat and beans, and small fields of rye are to be met with. Attention is also devoted to the feeding of cattle, and on the hills numbers of black-faced sheep are reared. The salmon fisheries yield a valuable rental, the fish being packed in ice and sent to the southern markets. The white or sea fishing employs many of the inhabitants, the species caught comprising whiting, cod, ling, halibut, turbot, soles, &c. Herring fishing is prosecuted during July and August, and is a source of much profit, many persons being employed in the curing of the fish. Manufactures as yet have not made much progress in this county, the principal being the making of woollens, flax and tow spinning, and net, rope and twine manufacturing. There are also one or two tanneries, breweries and distilleries. The county is destitute of both coal and marl, and there is very little limestone—all of which deficiencies bear hard upon agricultural improvement; these drawbacks, however seem to have excited more strongly the spirit of enterprise amongst the agriculturists, who import lime in great quantities from other districts by means of the Firth of Forth. The limestone of the county obtained near the coast is burnt with coal, in the more inland parts with peat or wood; but from the scarcity of fuel, there is much more lime imported into than is wrought in the shire. In Arbutnot parish, and near St. Cyrus on the sea shore, beautiful pebbles and jaspers are found. The coast is partly flat and partly rocky, and at the north-eastern corner of the county terminates the chain of the Grampians, where they form what is called the Girdleness, which presents to the sea a bold face of rock from sixty to eighty feet high. The chief mountains and eminences are Mount Battock, 3,465 feet in height; Clacknabane, 2,370; Clairniemount, 2,000; Kerloch, 1,890; the Hill of Fare from 1,500 to 1,700; Scolty Hill, 1,500; and Strathfanella, a detached Grampian, from 1,200 to 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. The county in its more level parts is highly embellished by the country seats of its numerous resident proprietors, each amid its own thriving woodland.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The most considerable rivers connected with this county are the Dee, the North Esk, the Cowie, the Bervie, and the Carron. The Dee glides for eight or ten miles through the northern limb of the shire; the North Esk is a boundary river on the south-west for about ten miles; the Cowie has a course of ten miles through the county, previous to its falling into the sea at Stonehaven, where also the Carron empties itself; and the Bervie, after a progress of sixteen miles, discharges itself into the sea at the town to which it imparts its name. The Luther water can only be mentioned as a tributary stream to the North Esk. The Caledonian railway, with several branches, passes through Kincardineshire, communicating on the north with the city of Aberdeen, and on the south with Edinburgh and various other places.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Kincardineshire comprises eighteen parishes and three parts of parishes; it contains within its limits a royal burgh—BERVIE, and a burgh of barony—STONEHAVEN, besides many other smaller towns and villages. Bervie, in conjunction with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin, and Forfar, returns one member to the Imperial Parliament, and the county at large another. The present member for the county is John William Crombie, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 was 5,719. The lord-lieutenant of the shire is Alexander Baird, Esq. of Urie. By the census returns of 1881, the entire county had a population of 24,464, and by those for 1891, 35,647, showing an increase in the ten years of 1,183. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was £210,241 railways, &c., £27,069; total, £237,310.

AUCHINBLAE AND FORDOUN.

AUCHINBLAE, the capital of the parish of Fordoun, is a thriving inland market town, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Luther water, 26 miles s. by w. from Aberdeen, 16 n. from Montrose, 11 s.w. from Stonehaven, 6 n.e. from Fettercairn, 5 n. from Laurencekirk, and 2½ w. from the Fordoun station on the Caledonian railway. The principal trade of the place is flax spinning, by power, which was established so early as 1795, being the second attempt in Scotland. Branches of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and the Town and County Bank, Limited, are established here. The town was lighted by gas in 1840; but the service is now discontinued and paraffin oil used in substitution. A Public Hall was erected in 1870 by public subscription, at a cost of £500. In consequence of the salubrity and pureness of the air, and the many beautiful and romantic walks in the immediate neighbourhood, it is much frequented during summer by families from the sea-coast towns of Arbroath, Montrose, Stonehaven, and Aberdeen. There is a small park of 5 acres in extent, on the Drumtochty estate close to the village, open to the public. In the western part of the parish, about a mile north-east from Fettercairn, is a small assemblage of tenements, being all that remains of the former county town, Kincardine, and among these, or in the vicinity, stood the court house. It ceased to be the chief town in the reign of James VI., when Stonehaven, as a more convenient situation for holding the county courts, obtained that distinction. In the vicinity are the remains of the castle or royal palace of Kincardine. There are no records stating when this castle was built, or when it was last inhabited, but it appears to have been a royal residence previous to the death of Kenneth III., in 994, for it was occupied by that monarch at the time of his murder by Finella. It stands on the termination of a small ridge, at an elevation of about 60 or 80 feet above the adjoining plain, and has a very commanding view of the most beautiful part of the Howe of the Mearns. It was in this palace, as Lord Hallas writes, that John Balliol resigned his crown to Edward I. of England, July 2nd, 1296, and he quotes the record of this in Rhymer's "Fletera." As this is the last event of importance on record connected with this palace, it is not improbable that it was destroyed in the wars between the Scotch and English which followed that event. Near to Fordoun there are distinct vestiges of a Roman encampment; and on the hill above Newlands there are the remains of a Druidical temple. About a mile west of Drumtochty Castle, in a retired and secluded glen, are the foundations of a small friary; and near to that is a fine spring, considered to be among the most copious flowing in Scotland. The parish extends, from east to west, about 10 miles, and in breadth about 7, and encloses an area of 26,869 statute acres. The southern part is level, but the north is mountainous, having a thin soil and inferior in fertility to the lower part. The present parish church, erected in 1829, and placed on a high rock in one of the most beautiful parts of the parish, is a large handsome edifice, in the Gothic style, with a tower on the west end rising to about 100 feet in height; and in a valley between where it stands and the town of Auchinblae is situated the Free church, a neat well-finished building, but much smaller and of humbler pretensions than its more aristocratic neighbour perched on the rock. Fairs are held at Auchinblae for the sale of cattle and the hiring of agricultural labourers, on Wednesday after the second Tuesday of May (old style); the 27th of May (hiring); Paddy fair, for cattle and horses, third Friday in July; and on the 28th November (hiring). The population of the parish of Fordoun was in 1881, 1,992, and in 1891, 2,004; of the latter number 482 were returned for Auchinblae.

BANCHORY-DEVENICK AND MARYCULTER,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF PORT-LETHEN.

BANCHORY parish lies on the south side of the river Dee, near its confluence with the sea. The parish, which is for the most part rugged, heathy, and stony, extends about 6 miles along the river, with one extremity bounded by the sea, and comprises an area of about 7,000 statute acres. The parish church, which is situated on the south side of the Dee, is distant about 4 miles s.w.
from Aberdeen. The parish also contains the small village of PORT-LETHEN, situated near the promontory of Girdleness, and now a quoad sacra parish and registration district, and a station on the Caledonian Railway. The nearest railway station is Cults, on the Deeside Branch of the Great North of Scotland Railway. Population of the parish in 1891, 1,981.

MARYCULTER parish also lies on the south side of the Dee, extending from that river to the Grampians, and is about 7 miles s.w. from Aberdeen; it is of an oblong form, being 6 miles in length by 2 in breadth and containing an area of 7,781 statute acres. The land adjacent to the river is partly low and fertile, but southward it is uneven and rocky and stony. The district is well wooded, and here and there are to be seen some thriving plantations. This parish appears to have been a favourite haunt of the Knight Templars. The Dee Side Hydropathic Establishment at HEATHCOT is a picturesque building, pleasantly situated, and distant 5 miles from Aberdeen. There is also a Roman Catholic college at BLAIRS.

The population of the parish in 1891 was about 1,950.

BANCHORY-TERNAN, DURRIS, AND STRACHAN.

BANCHORY-TERNAN is a parish lying on the banks of the Dee, further up the river than Banchory-Devenick. It is bounded by Durris on the east, Kincardine O'Neil on the west Midmar on the north, and Strachan on the south. The river Dee is here crossed by an iron truss bridge (1798-1829) of 175 feet span, and three stone arches. The village, which was founded in 1805, stands on the north side of the Dee, at a distance of 18 miles S.W. of Aberdeen. In 1885 it became a burgh by adopting the Police Act of 1862. It is governed by nine commissioners, with the usual officials under the Act. The parish church, which stands at the east end of the burgh, was erected in 1824; it is in the Gothic style of architecture, with a tower and clock, and is seated to contain 1,250 persons. The Free church, erected in 1880, at a cost of £5,000, upon land given by Sir Robert Burnett, Bart., in the centre of High street, is an imposing edifice of pink and white granite, in the early English style, with a tower 100 feet high, and an illuminated clock; it is seated to contain 700 persons. There are also places of worship belonging to the Episcopalians and the United Presbyterians. The Town Hall, a neat building erected in 1873, contains a large hall for entertainments, billiard room, &c. A public park was opened on the 3rd of August, 1887, the land for which (about 16 acres) was presented by the baronet above-named. It has been beautifully laid out, at a cost of about £800, and besides ornamental walks, &c. there is a large sheet of water, which in winter time is resorted to for skating and curling. In the parish are two or three lochs, one of which was some time ago drained and brought under cultivation. In the centre of it was an artificial island, built of oak, bearing the ruins of an old mansion or lake house. The supply of water to the city of Aberdeen is taken from the Dee at the western boundary of this parish, about 3½ miles above the village of Banchory. The cattle shows of the Deeside Agricultural Society are held at Banchory in July of each year, and fairs are held on the last Monday in January and February, the last Thursday in March, the Monday before the 26th of May, 3rd Tuesday in June, 2nd Tuesday in July (old style), 2nd Tuesday in August, 1st Tuesday (old style) in September, and the 2nd Monday in November and December respectively of each year. The parish contains an area of 20,079 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 3,066, and in 1891, 3,193.

DURRIS parish, which extends about 8 miles in length, by 3½ in breadth, lies on the south side of the Dee, from which the ground rises, and terminates at the ridge of the Grampian mountains. A great part of the parish has been enclosed, and many improvements effected. The parish is bounded by Maryculter and Fetteresso on the east, and Strachan and Glenbervie on the west, the northern boundary being the river Dee, which is here crossed by a neat iron bridge, erected in 1862. Durris is about 3 miles E. from Banchory Ternan. There are several lofty mountains in this district. The area of the parish is 15,294 statute acres, and its population in 1881 was 1,014, and in 1891, 918.

STRACHAN parish is bounded on the east by Durris, Glenbervie, and Fordoun, on the south also by the latter parish and Fettercairn, on the west by Lochlee, and on the north by Banchory Ternan. It extends 11 miles in length by from 7 to 9 in breadth, contains an area of 41,672 statute acres, and is for the greater part a mass of hills, some of which belong to the range of the Grampians. Clochnabane, more than 2,900 feet high, rises within the parish, the land of which is low towards the north, on which quarter it is bounded by the Dee, where it is tolerably well cultivated, and some of it planted, strawberries being extensively grown. The river Feugh passes through this parish, forming a picturesque cascade at the bridge of Feugh, near to where it falls into the Dee at Banchory. Population of the parish in 1861, 694, and in 1891, 655.

BERVIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES AND PARISHES OF GOURDON, ARBUTHNOTT, AND KINNEFF WITH CATTERLINE.

BERVIE (or INVERBERVIE, as it is frequently written), is a royal burgh, the capital of its parish, and chief town for many miles; 13 miles N. by E. from Montrose, 10 S. by W. from Stonehaven, and 25 S. by W. from Aberdeen; eligibly situated on the coast road from the last named city to Dundee, and at the mouth of the Bervie, which river is crossed by a good bridge of a single arch, spanning 103 feet. At the mouth of the river is a small basin which opens into an extensive bay, navigable for any vessel almost at any time. The basin could easily be converted into a very commodious and safe harbour, which would be the means of augmenting the general commerce of the place, and revive the fisheries on the coast. The principal trade of the town is the spinning of flax. Bervie is admirably adapted for the purpose of manufacture to any extent. The river is a fine stream, and in the driest season it has always abundance of water; it runs through a large valley, in which the first mill that was ever erected for spinning flax in Scotland stands. The town is well lighted with gas. The electric light has also been introduced into several of the public works. Bervie was constituted a royal burgh by charter from King David II. as a return for the kindness and hospitality with which he was received by the poor inhabitants, when he was forced in here by stress of weather, the place at which he landed is still called Craig David. James VI. renewed the charter, confirming all the privileges and immunities granted by David. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nine councillors. It joins with Montrose, Arbroath, Brechin, and Forfar, styled the Montrose burghs, in returning one member to Parliament; John Shiress Will, Esq. is the present representative. The sheriff small debt court, which used to be held in Bervie, is now removed to Stonehaven. Registration courts are still held once a year.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment and a Free church. The first mentioned is a handsome modern building of Gothic architecture, and is the principal ornament of the town. The commerce of this place and adjoining villages is benefited by the railway (Montrose and Bervie line), effecting as it does direct communication between the two towns. The weekly market, a considerable one for grain, is held on Wednesday, and the fairs on the Thursday before the 19th of May and September. GOURDON fishing village is one mile from Bervie, and contains a population of 1,091. The parish of Bervie comprises an area of 2,332 statute acres, and its population was in 1881 2,107; of this number 1,095 were returned for the parliamentary burgh. In 1891 the numbers were 2,387 and 1,195 respectively.

ARBUTHNOTT parish is of an irregular triangular form, nearly 5 miles in length, bounded on the west by Fordoun, or the great hollow of the Mearns, the streams of Bervie and Forth forming this line of division, and on the north-west by Glenbervie and Kinneff. The celebrated Dr. Arbuthnot, the intimate friend of Pope and Swift, was the son of the minister and a native of this parish. The present church of the Establishment is of very ancient date, and is said to have been founded as early as the thirteenth or fourteenth century. The part in use at the present time formed the nave of the old church. The chancel of the old building was for many years used as the place of sepulture of the Allerdice family, but now forms part of the church; and a small chapel adjoining, which was originally dedicated to the Virgin Mary, forms the burial place of the Arbuthnot family. The modern part was burned to the ground in 1889, but has been rebuilt, and it is pleasing to know that these interesting relics remain uninjured. Arbuthnot gives the title of Viscount to an ancient family of the same name, which became distinguished in the twelfth century. Sir Robert Arbuthnot, for loyalty to Charles II. was created a Baron and Viscount by that monarch. Acreage of the parish, 9,585; population in 1881, 809, and in 1891, 795.

KINNEFF, with which is incorporated the abrogated parish of CATTERLINE, lies on the sea coast south from Dunnottar, and is bounded by Arbuthnot on the west, and Bervie on the south. It extends from the water of Bervie to the northern point, about five miles along the coast, which is exceedingly bold and rocky. Upon the margin of the sea, not above 100 yards distance from the church, are to be seen the ruins of a castle, from which it is supposed the parish has taken its name; and tradition assigns it as having been the residence of a Scottish monarch named Kenneth. At Catterline, there is an Episcopal church, in connection with which there is a good school. Kinneff church is remarkable as being the place—in a hole under the pulpit—in which the regalia of Scotland were deposited, from 1651 to the Revolution. These valuable memorials of Scottish loyalty were ingeniously conveyed out of the Castle of Dunnottar, while besieged by General Lambert, by Mrs. Grainger, wife of the incumbent of the parish, and her servant girl. The parish encloses an area of 7,130 statute acres, and contained in 1881 a population numbering 997.

DRUMLITHIE AND GLENBERVIE.

DRUMLITHIE is a village in the parish of Glenbervie, 18 miles N. from Montrose, 7 N. by W. from Bervie, and about 6½ S.W. from Stonehaven; situated nearly in the centre of the east side of the county, on the road from the last-named town to Laurencekirk, and is a station on the Caledonian railway. The village is an assemblage of ill-built houses, so perplexingly arranged as to constitute a bewildering labyrinth. The parish of Glenbervie extends upwards of 6 miles in length, by a breadth of 3 in some parts, and 5 at others; bounded on the west by the Water of Bervie and Fordoun, on the east by Dunnotar and Fetteresso, on the south and south-east by Arbutnott, and on the north by the hills of Strachan and Durris. The soil in the upper part of the district is of bluish clay, and in the lower a dry fertile loam. The northern portion of the parish lies partly among the Grampian Hills. The river Bervie bounds the district partly on the west, and the Carron has its source within it. The hamlet of GLENBERVIE, which stands in the vicinity of the former river, is a barony of the Douglas family. Free and Episcopal churches are in Drumlithie, and a church of the Establishment at Glenbervie. A fair is held on the first Thursday after the second Tuesday in October. The parish of Glenbervie contains 15,041 statute acres, and by the returns for 1891 had a population numbering 887.

FETTERCAIRN

IS a parish and village—the latter 98 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 12 N.W. from Montrose, 16½ S.W. from Stonehaven, 11 N. from Brechin, 4½ N.W. from Laurencekirk, situated on a small streamlet, a tributary to the North Esk. The latter river is crossed by a romantic bridge called the Bridge of Gannachy, which springs from a precipitous rock at either extremity, and is elevated to a great height above the water. The village has the advantage of a branch of the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and there is a large distillery in the immediate vicinity. In the village square is the old cross of Kincardine, an erection of great antiquity. About a mile west is a ruin called Fenella's Castle, in connection with which is a singular tradition concerning the murder of Kenneth III. by a powerful lady named Fenella, in revenge for the death of her son, who was slain by that monarch in rebellion. Besides the handsome parish church, there is a Free church and an Episcopal church, and a library is maintained. At one end of the village stands a graceful arch, erected to commemorate the visit of the Queen and the Prince Consort, on the 21st September, 1861. There is also a fountain erected in memory of the late Sir John Stuart Forbes of Fettercairn. The parish of Fettercairn lies at the foot of the lower range of the Grampians, and extends considerably into the Mearns; the ground on the west is light and sharp, with a small mixture of moss, on the east it becomes deeper and of a fertile clay loam. The name of the parish is derived from the said Fenella cairn or castle, and the eminences or moraines in the vicinity. The parish encloses an area of 13,728 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,503; of this number 398 were returned for the village. The numbers for 1891 were 1,376 and 362 respectively.

JOHNSHAVEN, BENHOLM AND ST. CYRUS.

JOHNSHAVEN is a seaport village in the parish of Benholm, 14 miles S.W. from Stonehaven, and 4 S.W. from Bervie, situated at the bottom of a hill between the coast road and the sea, and a little off the main thoroughfare between Aberdeen and Montrose, 29 miles S.W. from the former town, and 9 N.E. from the latter. It contains an extensive manufactory for sail cloths, sackings, &c., and there is also a brewery in the village. The parish of Benholm forms a square of nearly 8 miles, enclosing an area of 4,891 statute acres, lying on the shore of the German Ocean, bounded on the north by Bervie, and on the south by St. Cyrus. The land is level on the coast, and the interior consists of hill and dale, and beneath the surface is deposited good freestone and limestone. The old Tower of Benholm, before the invention of gunpowder, was considered a strong place of defence. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. The Montrose and Bervie railway passes through the parish, and has a station at Johnshaven. The parish contained a population of 1,527 in 1881, of which number 1,041 were returned for Johnshaven; in 1891 the numbers were 1,557 and 1,040 respectively.

ST. CYRUS, sometimes called Ecclesgreig, is a parish and village, the latter situated 4 miles S.W. from Johnshaven, between the coast and the road from Montrose, which passes through the district. The parish, which measures 7 miles in length by 3 in breadth, with an area of 8,249 statute acres, lies partly on the sea shore, having Ben-holm on the east, Garvock on the north, Marykirk on the north-west and the North Esk river washes part of its western boundary. The places of worship are the parish and Free churches. There are two schools in the village, the public, and an excellent industrial school, built and endowed by the late General Straton, of Kirkside. This Peninsula and Waterloo hero also left legacies for the poor of the district. The sea salmon fisheries along the coast of the parish are very valuable; the yearly rental amounting to about £2,500, and of the river fishings to about £1,000. The surface of the parish is pretty level, but intersected with several glens and rivulets, and is elevated in some places to little hills. More than three-fourths is arable. The burn in Den Fella forms a beautiful cascade by falling over a rock 63 feet in height. The ancient residence of the Barclay family, known by the name of the Kame of Mathers, stands in ruins on a peninsula of Lauriston, the base of which is washed by the sea. The Castle of Lauriston is an ancient building. The parish contains limestone quarries and plenty of excellent freestone. St. Cyrus is a station on the Montrose and Bervie line. The population of the parish in 1881 was 1,487, and in 1891, 1,327.

LAURENCEKIRK,

MARYKIRK, GARVOCK, AND THE VILLAGE OF LUTHERMUIR.

LAURENCEKIRK, the capital of its parish and the chief town of the Howe, is a thriving and respectable burgh, 93 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 10 N. from Montrose, and 14 S.W. from Stonehaven, situated on the main road from Perth to Aberdeen, and is a station on the railway to that city. Formerly a mere hamlet, seated amidst an uncultivated tract of country, it is indebted for the consequence it enjoys at the present day to Lord Gardenstone, a judge of the court of session, who, in the year 1772, took it under his fostering care and patronage. In 1779 he procured for the place the privileges of a burgh of barony, with the right of holding a weekly market. The town contains a main street nearly a mile in length, one parallel to it, and two or three short ones branching from the principal streets, the whole being well lighted with gas. It is governed by a bailie and four councillors, who are chosen every three years, and now elects its own police commissioners. A sheriff small debt court is held three times a year. Branches of the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, are established here, and there is also a Savings Bank. The parish, which was formerly called Convent, is 4 miles in length, and 3 at its greatest breadth. A ridge of hills stretches through the whole extent, from east to west, sloping gradually to the north and south; the small river Luther passes through the district, and numerous brooks intersect it. The name Laurencekirk is derived from the old parish kirk dedicated to St. Laurence. Besides the Established church, there are Free and Episcopal churches and an Independent chapel. In 1866 a public hall was erected by public subscription, at a cost of some £1,400, called St. Laurence Hall. There is also a good brewery belonging to Mr. David Cameron, and an extensive cattle auction mart. Fairs are held on the third Wednesday in January (St. Anthony's fair—old style), and cattle fairs on the last Thursday in April and Thursday after the third Tuesday in July (St. James's fair—old style), and the first Thursday in November (new style). Horse market on the Monday before the first Friday in March; cattle, horse and sheep, Thursday after second Tuesday in August (old style), and Monday before last Wednesday in September. Cattle and grain markets are held every Monday throughout the year. The parish of Laurencekirk has an area extending over 5,612 statute acres, and by the Government returns for 1881 contained a population of 2,045; of this number 1,454 were returned for the burgh. In 1891 the parish contained 1,934, and the town 1,428.

The parish of MARYKIRK lies on the north bank of the North Esk, at the extremity of the Howe or Hollow of the Mearns, and is bounded by Garvock, St. Cyrus, and Laurencekirk on the east, Fettercairn and Fordoun on the north, and Fettercairn and the North Esk on the west. It is 6 miles in length and 5 in breadth, and embraces an area of 9,841 statute acres. The surface is level, and the soil, though various, is chiefly fertile. Some fine plantations ornament the district, which is interspersed with a few handsome seats. The parish contains two villages, LUTHERMUIR and MARYKIRK; the latter is situated on the road about half way between Montrose and Laurencekirk. The parish of Marykirk contained at the census for 1891, 1,307 inhabitants.

The parish of GARVOCK lies south-east of Laurencekirk, its post town, which is about 2½ miles distant from the centre of the parish. Its length south-westward is fully 7 miles, and its greatest breadth is about 4 embracing an area of 7,966 acres. It is bounded on the south by Marykirk, on the west by Laurencekirk and Fordoun, on the north by Arbutnot, and on the East by Benholm and St. Cyrus. The parish church, a plain building, situated about the centre of the parish was erected in 1778. About two-thirds of the parish is under cultivation, and the work of reclaiming and improving is still in progress. A cattle and feuing fair, of four days continuance (called St. James's fair) used to be held on the hill of Garvock, about half a mile from the church, and was for some time the most important in the county, but it is now transferred to Laurencekirk. On the summit of Garvock hill there are two large Druidical cairns. The parish of Garvock had, in 1891, a population of 423, and in 1891, 415.

STONEHAVEN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF COOKNEY, FETTERESSO, AND DUNNOTTAR.

STONEHAVEN (or Stanehive), is a seaport and the county town of Kincardine, 110 miles N. by E. from Edinburgh, 68 N.E. from Perth, 66 S.E. from Banff, 35 N. by E. from Arbroath, 25 N.E. from Montrose, 15 S. from Aberdeen, and 10 N.E. from Bervie. It is a favourite summer resort, being situated on a beautiful bay of the sea. Since the creation of the town into a police burgh, the Commissioners have made and are still making great improvements. It is situated within a mile of a station on the Caledonian railway, on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the Carron stream, in the bottom of a bay, and flanked on both sides by lofty hills. The place, which is considerable, though not a royal burgh, is composed of an old and new town; the former lies on the south bank of the Carron, adjacent to the harbour, in the parish of Dunnottar; the other on a peninsula, or angle, formed by the Carron and the Cowie, in the parish of Fetteresso. The two towns are connected by a bridge, forming a continuation of the road from the south to Aberdeen. The new town is laid out on a regular plan, having broad streets, with a square in the centre, in which stands a good market house, erected in 1827, surmounted by a handsome spire 130 feet in height. The town hall, in Allardie street, which stands opposite the market house, was erected in 1878, at a cost of £4,000, by public subscription, and is vested in trustees. It is a fine building, and contains news, billiard, and reading rooms. The harbour is a natural basin, sheltered on the south-east by a high rock which projects into the sea, and on the north-east by a quay that affords every facility for loading or unloading vessels. The shipping of the port is chiefly employed in the coal and lime trade, and occasionally in exporting grain to Leith. During the season herring fishing is carried on to the great advantage of the place. The celebrated Glenury Distillery is in the vicinity, and the manufacture of woollens is extensively carried on, besides which there are a tannery, a brewery, and several net and rope and twine manufactories. There are three banking houses, two savings banks, and several good inns. The sheriff ordinary court is held every Wednesday in time of session, and a sheriff small debt court on the same day during the sitting of the first-mentioned court. A newspaper, the Stonehaven Journal, is published here every Thursday.

The Established churches of Dunnottar and Fetteresso are situated near the town; there are also Free, United Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are three cemeteries in close proximity—namely, at FETTERESSO and COWIE, one mile and a half respectively from the town, and at DUNNOTTAR, one mile distant; there is also at the latter distance an attractive garden open to the public. The principal object that can awaken interest in the vicinity of Stonehaven is Dunnottar Castle, about a mile and a half south of the town; it is seated on a perpendicular rock, 150 feet above the level of the sea, about three acres in extent, and almost separated from the land by a deep chasm. The entrance is by a square tower of great strength, within high water mark; the skeleton of the structure still occupies one-half of the summit of the rock, and forms one of the most majestic piles of ruins in Scotland. This castle withstood a long siege by Cromwell's army, and its ultimate surrender was upon honourable terms; it was often used as a state prison, and several of the nonconforming Presbyterian clergy were compelled to be its inmates. It was built during the contest between Bruce and Baliol, by an ancestor of the Marischal family. It was dismantled shortly after the rising of 1715, when its proprietor, James, Earl Marischal, was attainted for high treason. Since that period (the direct line of succession having failed) the castle became by purchase the property of the nearest heir male, Sir Alexander Keith, of Dunnottar and Ravelston, Knight Marischal of Scotland, and is now the property of the trustees of Mrs. Ann Katherine Innes. Though dismantled, the stonework of the fortress is yet pretty entire, there being in general nothing wanting excepting the roofs and the floors; the battlements, the formidable towers and airy turrets full of loopholes for the archer and musketeer, the hall for the banquet and the cell for the captive, are all alike entire, and their respective limits and divisions distinct. It was in this castle, during the Commonwealth, that the regalia of Scotland was placed, which was afterwards conveyed away and secreted under the pulpit in the parish church of Kinneff. The regular weekly market is held on Thursday, and there is another for cattle and grain on that day from Martinmas to Candlemas. Fairs: Thursday before May 28th for hiring servants; on the third Thursday in June, the second Thursday in August (old style), for cattle; Thursday before November 28th for hiring servants, and the Thursday before Christmas Day (old style), for cattle. The population of Stonehaven was in 1881, 3,957, which in 1891 had increased to 4,500.

DUNNOTTAR, anciently spelt Dunoyter, is a parish of an irregular form, the eastern side running from Stonehaven to the south, a distance of 5 miles; and from thence about 5 miles north; abutting on the parishes of Kinneff and Glenbervie, from thence descending to the Carron Water at the base of that hill, where Dunnottar and Glenbervie are met by the parish of Fetteresso. The principal object of interest in the parish is the castle previously mentioned, within the walls of which formerly stood the parish church; the seaward boundary of the parish is a continuous chain of rocks and cliffs containing many caverns, one of which extends more than 150 yards, which render Dunnottar one of the most romantic places on the east coast. The old town of Stonehaven is in this parish, near to which is situated the parish church. The parish embraces an area of 7,793 acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 2,498, and in 1891, 2,739.

COOKNEY, erected a quoad sacra parish and registration district in 1859, was taken from the northern side of Fetteresso. The parish church, which is about central, is 5 miles N.W. from Stonehaven, and about a mile from the village of SKATERO. It is bounded on the west by the parish of Durrus, on the north by Maryculter and Banchory-Devenick (that part known as the quoad sacra parish of Port-Lethen), on the east by the German Ocean, and on the south by Fetteresso; it is about 6 miles long from west to east, and 4 miles broad, the soil along the coast being well cultivated and fertile, but there is much barren land to the west. Most of this was at one time common, but it was divided among the neighbouring heritors, and is now under cultivation and much improved. At MUCHALLS is a coastguard station, and a station on the Scottish North-Eastern railway; and here fairs are held on the first Tuesday in May for cattle and horses; Tuesday before second Wednesday in June, first Tuesday in August, first Tuesday in October (O.S.), for cattle and horses. There are two fishing villages, SKATERO and STRANATHRO, in the parish. Population in 1881, 1,076 in 1891, 1,764 FETTERESSO is a parish about 10 miles in length, and between 5 and 6 in breadth, enclosing an area of 27,245 statute acres. It is bounded on the south by the parish of Dunnotar, on the west by Glenbervie, Durris and Maryculter, on the north by Maryculter and Banochry-Devenick, and on the east by the German Ocean. The northern part of the parish is Cookney, now created a separate parish for ecclesiastical and registration matters. The principal streams are the Carron and the Cowie, which run from west to east; the former divides the parish from Dunnotar for about 5 miles, entering the sea at Stonehaven; the latter has a similar course and termination. Fetteresso Castle is the seat of the Right Hon. R. W. Duff, and was once the ancient abode of the Earls Marischal, but since rebuilt and extended. The new town of Stonehaven is in this parish, near to which is the parish church, also the village of Cowie, one mile and a half distant, which contains a cemetery. The parish contained in 1881 a population of 5,541, and in 1891, 5,527.

KINROSS-SHIRE.

THIS is a small inland county, situated on the western boundary of Fifeshire, towards its south-western quarter, from which it was severed in the year 1426; Fife also bounds it on the southern side, and Perthshire lies on its northern and western limits. At the Revolution, Kinross being considered too small a county as it then stood, was enlarged by the addition of Orwell, Cleish, and Talliebole, which parishes before that period formed a portion of Fifeshire. The general figure of the county is somewhat circular, although the line of its boundary is very irregular. It extends from east to west about thirteen miles; and from north to south about twelve miles. The total superficies of the county amounts to seventy square miles of land, and seven of lakes; of cultivated land about 27,700 acres, and of uncultivated about 13,400 acres. This is the smallest of the Scottish counties except Clackmannan, and in population numbers the least. Its name is significant of its local situation, importing the "head of the peninsula."

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, &c.—The boundaries or outskirts of the county are generally hilly; and the shire may be described as an open vale or plain, environed by uplands and hills. The Ochil hills, which separate the district from Strathearn, are the northern boundary; the Lomond hills are the eastern; Benarty hill the south-eastern; and Cleish hills the south and south-western. These eminences are generally adapted for pasture and the rearing of cattle; but they are likewise in several places suited to cultivation, and exhibit many pleasing and productive arable fields. The original condition of Kinross resembled that of the contiguous county of Fife, having been of a moory, mossy nature. Up to a comparatively recent epoch the lands were bleak and unreclaimed—a circumstance partly attributable to a certain local characteristic—namely, the district has the remarkable peculiarity in its proprietary of being much divided into farms, each owned in feu by its tenant; there are, in consequence, more resident lairds in proportion to its extent in this part of the country than are to be found in any other division of Scotland. The farms, it appears, were feued about the commencement of the eighteenth century from the house of Kinross to the tenants then in possession, whose descendants inherit the properties, paying for them an exceedingly trifling duty or quit-rent. The marches of the various farms not having been accurately defined, and being more confused by the practice of "runrig," it was long before the county manifested any very active signs of improvement. Within the recollection of persons still living, few districts were worse cultivated or less profitable than Kinross-shire; but the prime minister Pitt's institution of rack-rent taxation, in conjunction with other circumstances (among which undoubtedly may be included the good example exhibited by neighbouring agriculturists), ultimately induced a spirited change; and now the progress of agriculture—the mode of draining, enclosing and planting—can compete with those of Fife and most other districts. Drainage, on an extensive and effectual system, has been carried into operation on the Carse, east from Loch Leven, and on its margin; in all directions in this particular quarter productive arable fields present themselves, where, only comparatively a few years ago, nothing met the view but desolate moors and sombre mosses. Oats, barley, and peas are the crops chiefly cultivated, but great attention is paid to the growing of turnip and potatoes. At this day many good roads intersect the shire; and various parts of it are sheltered by thriving, comfort-inspiring plantations. The manufactures of the county are only of moderate importance, and consist chiefly in the weaving of linen fabrics, and the making of plaids, tartan shawls, and other woollen goods. The mineralogy of Kinross-shire is a subject of limited importance. Coal abounds in some localities, and works for raising it have been established on the Blairadam estate; whinstone has been found in several parishes, so has freestone and sandstone of the best quality; and of limestone there is plenty.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—There are no rivers of magnitude in this county; the only ones that can be named are the Gairney, on the southern boundary of Kinross parish; the South Quelch, that run below the town of Kinross; and the North Quelch, on the northern boundary of the parish—all which, and a few rivulets besides, discharge themselves into Loch Leven. This beautiful and noble expanse of water (which we shall have to notice particularly under Kinross town) lies at the east end of a wide vale, and nearly in the centre of the county; the small river Leven issues from it, and pursues an easterly course through Fifeshire. Besides Loch Leven there are a few minor lakes, or (as they are properly termed) tarns, on the eminences above Cleish. On the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British Railway there is a station at the town of Kinross, also one on the Devon Valley branch of the same railway, and since the completion of the Forth Bridge, Kinross is now on the direct route from Edinburgh to the north.

Kinross-shire comprises only four complete parishes, and three parts of parishes; it possesses only one town, Kinross—with a large populous village in its neighbourhood, called Milnathort. The county, which has no parliamentary burgh, joins with Clackmannanshire in returning one member to the Imperial Parliament; the present representative being the Right Hon. John Blair Balfour, q.c. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 numbered 1,633. The Lord Lieutenant is Sir Graham Graham Montgomery, Bart. According to the census returns for 1881, the county contained a population of 6,697, and by those for 1891, 6,289, showing a decrease of 408. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 (including railways) was £70,699.

KINROSS AND MILNATHORT,

WITH ORWELL, FOSSOWAY AND TULLIEBOLE, CROOK OF DEVON, PORTMOAK, AND CLEISH.

KINROSS, the capital of its county and parish, and a burgh under the Police and General Improvement Act, is a town of considerable antiquity. It is 27 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 19 S.W. from Cupar-Fife, 17 S. from Perth, and 10 W. from Dunfermline, which last named town is approached by the North British railway. The town occupies a pleasant site at the foot of the open vale to which it gives name, on the north-western shore of Loch Leven. It formerly consisted of a number of sinuous lanes, composed of buildings of antique appearance, bordering on the lake; in later times it has undergone many extensive improvements in the erection of new houses, particularly in the main street, through which is the road to the north. In this street are the principal inns and shops. There are two woollen spinning mills and a linen power loom factory in the town, and shawl weaving is carried on. As Kinross is the capital of the county, the courts of the sheriff sit here every Tuesday during session, and occasionally during vacation; justice of peace courts are held as required. The County Building, in which the courts are held, were erected in 1826, at a cost of £2,000; a police station has since been added. A Town Hall was built by subscription some years ago, on the site of the old parish church, but being found too small for many purposes, a more commodious structure was built in 1869. The places of worship are the parish church, a handsome Gothic erection of modern date; a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and an Episcopal church; the latter, dedicated to St. Paul, is a very neat edifice of Gothic architecture, erected in 1875. There are also two public schools, which are large and commodious. The Kinross-shire Advertiser newspaper is published here. In the vicinity of the town, on a promontory jutting into Loch Leven, is situated Kinross House, a structure designed and built by Sir William Bruce, the architect of the modern part of Holyrood House, and many other mansions, in the style of the time of Charles II. The environs of the town derive much of their beauty from the pleasure grounds and exuberant plantations around this edifice, which stands near the northern entrance to the town, and opposite to the island and castle of Queen Mary, on Loch Leven. This noble sheet of water is twelve miles in circumference, and contains four islands, the largest of which occupies nearly a hundred English acres; upon this latter stood the ancient priory of St. Serf (or St. Servanus), of which only a fragment now remains. On another stand the ruins of the castle of Loch Leven, once the seat of the Douglas, and in recent times rendered celebrated by Sir Walter Scott in his novel of "The Abbott." Here the unfortunate Queen Mary was imprisoned. The spot where the Queen landed upon her escape from the island castle, May 2nd, 1568, has been variously stated. There seems, however, to be good reason for believing that it was in the neighbourhood of the churchyard. In corroboration of this is the finding, in 1805, of a number of keys, supposed to be those thrown into the loch when the queen made her escape; also the discovery of eight small keys of antique make in the same bearings, but nearer to the castle. The first mentioned are now in the possession of the Earl of Morton, the others being in the Antiquarian Museum of Edinburgh. A fine walk by the water is much resorted to in good weather. The loch is stored with trout of a red colour and first rate quality, and eels, perch, pike, &c. The excellent sport obtained, and the other attractions of the locality, draw a yearly increasing number of visitors. The fishing season begins on the 1st January and closes on the 31st August. Rod fishing begins generally in April, for which there is an ample supply of boats on the loch. The North British Railway Company have two stations in the town, which is in direct communication with Edinburgh, via the Forth bridge, on the main line. At the Junction communication is open to Ladybank, and by the Devon Valley Railway access is also had to Alloa and Stirling. There is another station (Loch Leven) on the Edinburgh and Perth section of the North British line. There is also a station at Balado, on the Devon Valley branch, 3 miles from the village of Cleish, and about 2½ from Kinross. At the hamlet of TILLYCHIE, in the parish, and 5 miles distant from the town of Kinross, there is a woollen spinning mill. A county market, principally for the sale of corn, is held i Milnathort on Monday, and an auction mart for the sale of live stock has also been established there. Fairs are also held on the fourth Monday of March, second Monday of June, fourth Monday of July, and fourth Monday of October, all for cattle, horses, and sheep; and there are hirings on the fourth Monday in July, and Thursday after second Tuesday in October. The parish of Kinross contains an area of 7,275 statute acres, and at the census taken in 1881 had 2,492 inhabitants; of this number 1,960 were returned for the town; in 1891 the numbers were 2,885 for the parish, and 1,902 for the town.

ORWELL is a parish situated to the north of Kinross and Loch Leven. It is of an oblong form, its greatest length from east to west being 5½ miles, and its greatest breadth from north to south about 5 miles. It is bounded on the north by the parishes of Forgandenny and Arngask, on the east by Strathmiglo and Portmoak, on the south by Fossoway and Kinross, and by Fossoway on the west. The greater part of Orwell is fine arable land, well enclosed and planted. On the low ground, towards the lake, stand the ruins of the ancient castle of Burleigh, formerly the residence of Lord Burleigh.

MILNATHORT, popularly designated Mills o' Forth, is a considerable village in the parish of Orwell, one mile and a half N.E. from Kinross. It is neatly built, and is one of the most thriving and industrious villages within the county. It is a station on the Edinburgh and Perth section of the North British railway. Adjoining the station is the Kinross-shire Auction Mart, and being the only one in the county, has become a very important medium for the disposal of live stock; weekly sales take place on Monday, and there is also a corn market held on the same day. The government of the village is carried on by a committee of the inhabitants. In the centre of the village is the public hall, which is one of the chief ornaments, being surmounted by a spire, with a clock. There are three places of worship—the parish church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church. The latter is a handsome Gothic building, with a spire 125 feet high; it was erected in 1863, at a cost of £3,000. Another ornamental building deserving of notice is a school erected by the liberality of James Brand, Esq. of London, in memory of his father, who was a native of the village. There is also a public school. The inhabitants are principally employed in woollen shawl (hand-loom) weaving. There are also a spinning mill and a linen power-loom factory, which find employment for a number of hands.

MIDDLETON, DALQUECH, and SEGIE are hamlets in the parish from 1 to 2 miles distant from Milnathort. The Mawcarse station, on the Fife and Kinross branch of the North British railway, is in this parish, about 2 miles distant from Milnathort. Acreage of Orwell parish, 13,193. Population in 1881, 2,031, of which number Milnathort contained 1,269; in 1891 the parish contained 1,852, Milnathort having 1,139 of that number.

FOSSOWAY and TULLIEBOLE is a united parish in the west of Kinross-shire. In shape it is very irregular; the area is about 50 square miles, a portion being occupied by the eastern extremity of the Ochils. It is bounded on the north by Dunning, on the east by Orwell and Kinross, on the south by Cleish, Torryburn, and Saline, and on the west and north-west by Clackmannanshire and Muckart. Fossoway and Tulliebole were formed into one parish about the year 1614. The parish has two small agricultural villages, named CROOK OF DEVON and BLAIRINGONE, and the hamlets of POWMILL and CARNO. Besides the parish church at Crook of Devon there is a quoad sacra church at Blairingone, and also a Free church in the parish; and there are also public schools.

About 2 miles from Crook of Devon, following the course of the river, and about 7 from Kinross, is the celebrated Rumbling Bridge, and a little further on is the equally famous Cauldron Linn. The scenery in the neighbourhood of this fall is such as is not often met with, and since the opening of the Devon Valley railway the locality has become much frequented by tourists. CROOK OF DEVON and RUMBLING BRIDGE are stations on the Devon Valley railway. Acreage, 17,338. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,267, and in 1891, 1,085.

PORTMOAK is a parish lying round the east of Loch Leven. It is bounded on the north by Strathmiglo, on the east by Leslie and Kinglassie, on the south by Auchterderran and Ballingry, and on the west by Kinross and Orwell. Like Fossoway its outline is irregular; length from north-west to south-east nearly 6½ miles, greatest breadth 3¼ miles; embracing an area of 9,957 statute acres. It contains the villages or hamlets of BALGEDIE, KINNESSWOOD, and SCOTLANDWELL, situated respectively about 4½, 5, and 6 miles east of Kinross, the inhabitants of which are employed in agriculture and weaving. Bishophill, the western peak of the Lomonds, is in this parish, and occupies a large portion of the area in the north-east. This hill is 1,150 feet above Loch Leven and 1,492 feet above sea level, and contains lime and freestone. Wells of pure water are numerous on the west side of the hill, and in one place, near Scotlandwell, there are three, with a copious flow of water, not far from each other. Andrew Winton, the chronicler of Scotland, was a native of this parish; and it was for twenty-eight years under the charge of the Rev. Ebenezer Erskine, one of the founders of the Secession church. The village of Kinnesswood is also famous as the birth-place of Michael Bruce. The house in which the poet was born, and in which he died, has been restored. There are three places of worship in the parish—the parish church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church, the two former situated between Kinnesswood and Scotlandwell, and the latter at Balgedie; there is also a public school in the parish. The nearest stations are Mawcarse, on the Fife and Kinross railway, about two miles north-west of Kinnesswood and three from Scotlandwell; and Leslie in Fife-shire, on the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee section of the North British railway, a mile farther distant in the opposite direction. Population in 1881, 1,042, and in 1891, 844.

CLEISH is a parish of an oblong form, stretching east and west. Its length is about 6 and its breadth about 2 miles. It is 2 miles from the town of Kinross, and Kinross parish forms its northern boundary. On the east it is bounded by Ballingry, on the south by Beath, and on the west by Dunfermline and Fossoway. A range of hills, called Cleish hills, runs along the western end of the parish, affording fine pasturage for sheep. The rest of the soil is under tillage, which is the chief employment of the inhabitants. There are quarries of freestone in the parish, and coal is extensively wrought on the estate of BLAIRADAM, which occupies a large part of this parish and of Beath and Dunfermline, and is the seat of Sir Charles E. Adam, Bart., son of the late Right Hon. William P. Adam, who for some time was member of Parliament for the united counties of Clackmannan and Kinross, and, at the time of his death was governor of Madras, India. The villages are CLEISH, 4 miles S. from Kinross, where the parish church and public school are situated, MARYBURGH, 4½ miles, and KELTY BRIDGE, 5 miles distant. Blairadam station, in this parish, 3 miles distant from Kinross, is on the North British railway, and is placed in direct communication with Edinburgh and Perth. Acreage, 6,201. Population in 1881, 498, and in 1891, 580.

KIRKCUDBRIGHTSHIRE,

COMMONLY called a STEWARTRY, but in reality to all intents and purposes a sheriffdom or shire, lies on the south of Scotland, and forms the eastern and by far the most extensive portion of the ancient district of Galloway. It is bounded by Dumfries-shire on the east and north-east; on the south by the Solway Firth and the Irish Sea; by the county of Ayr on the north and north-west, and by Wigtownshire (or Western Galloway) and Wigtown Bay on the west. In extent it measures, from south-east to north-west, about forty-four miles, by a breadth varying from twenty to thirty miles, the narrowest part being on the north and towards its north-western limits; it comprises a superficies of 897 square miles, or 574,587 acres. About one-half of the whole surface may be said to be brought into cultivation. This shire in point of size is the tenth, and in population the twentieth of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—It appears that the denomination of "Stewartry" originated at the period when, by forfeiture of the possessions of the Baliols, the Cummins, and their various vassals, this district became the property of the Crown, when it is understood to have been first put under the authority of a royal STEWART; in subsequent times the office of steward, in the appointment of the king, was one of much honour, and was often the subject of contest. For a considerable lapse of time, however, after the establishment of a separate stewarship, the district was still in some measure esteemed to be politically attached to Dumfries-shire; but this nominal connection was formally dissolved before the civil wars in the reign of Charles I. From the force of ancient usage, the appellation of steward, instead of that of sheriff, has, down to the present day, been popularly continued, although, by the civil arrangements of modern times, there is not the least difference in the two offices. Events in early times possessing considerable interest are more immediately connected with Kirkcudbright, its capital, which was frequently visited by, and occasionally became the abode of, royalty. Edward I. spent some time there during the warfare of 1300; and in 1455 it was visited by James II. in the course of his march through Galloway. A few years later, in 1461, Henry VI., with his queen and court, fled thither after his defeat at Towton; and in 1508 James IV. was hospitably entertained in the town.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil of the county is principally composed of a thin mould or a brownish loam mixed with sand, and is incumbent sometimes on gravel, and in many places on rock; the whole surface is interspersed with meadows and mingled with moss. The shire has no statistical subdivisions, except that four of the most northerly parishes—Carsphairn, Dalry, Kells, and Balmaclellan—are commonly designated the district of "Glenkens." The aspect of the country, however, forms a very natural distinction into two divisions; if a line be drawn from the centre of Kirkpatrick-Irongray parish to Gatehouse-of-Fleet, all to the north-west, with little exception, is so mountainous that it may with propriety be termed a Highland district; while the south and east parts exhibit a fine champaign and cultivated country—a contrast strikingly obvious. The principal eminences in the shire are Criffell (or Crawford), 1,800 feet; Cairnsmuir, 1,728 feet; Blencairn, 1,200 feet; and Cairn, 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. Anciently the greater proportion of the land was covered with a forest, which is now eradicated, or to be traced only in trifling remnants on the banks of the streams. It appeared that, so early as the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, this hilly territory was under a productive process of agriculture, originated and improved by the assiduity of the monks of the different abbeys in the district; and it is upon record that in the memorable year 1300, when Edward I. subdued Galloway, he caused considerable quantities of wheat to be exported from the harbour of Kirkcudbright to Cumberland, and even to Dublin, to be manufactured into flour, in which state it was brought back to victual the various strongholds and castles held by that monarch. In these times the staple products were wheat and oats, the culture of barley, peas, and beans being very limited. This age of agricultural prosperity was succeeded by destructive intestine wars, fanaticism, improvidence, and consequent misery, which lasted 400 years, and reduced the country to a desert. It was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that any measures were adopted to form a resuscitation of its agricultural capabilities, which for so long a period had lain dormant. The enclosure of the land with fences was the first attempt of a series of improvements; but this judicious preliminary was encountered by a riotous opposition from the rural population, who rose in considerable numbers, under the title of "levellers," and proceeded to demolish the newly-formed boundaries, under the influence of some extravagantly wild notions as to a natural general right in property; and they were not subdued until the most energetic measures were employed for that purpose. This mischievous result of ignorance having been overcome, however, and the "levelling" delusion dissipated, the county steadily advanced in an accelerated degree of improvement; and towards the close of the same century the district could compete with Dumfries and other adjacent shires in agricultural prosperity. Planting has been introduced by several noblemen and gentlemen of the stewartry, and much has been accomplished in reclaiming moss lands. The chief crop is oats, but wheat, barley, beans, turnips and potatoes are also cultivated, though not to the same extent as the first named. The number of horses, cattle and sheep reared in the county is moderately large, but the Galloway breed of horses has given way to others of a larger and stronger variety; while for dairy purposes the Ayrshire cattle are gradually superseding the black Galloway cow. Sheep and swine have considerably increased in numbers. The district is very nearly destitute of coal, which, as well as the greater part of the lime used, is brought from Cumberland, and there is very little freestone. Marl is found in great plenty, especially in the loch of Carlinwark, which contains an inexhaustible store of the best shell marl. The mineral wealth of the county consists chiefly in its granite, which is extensively wrought in the neighbourhood of Dalbeattie and Creetown, and for the polishing of which there are works at both places. Besides the salmon fishings at the mouths of the rivers, the Solway Firth affords every opportunity for the capture of the inhabitants of the deep. The manufactures are of small value, and consist principally in the making of woollen goods.

RIVERS, RAILWAYS, &c.—Like other mountainous counties, this is intersected by numerous streams, which, uniting, form four considerable rivers; these are—the Dee, the Ken, the Cree, and the Ure. The Ken is considered the largest, receiving in its course numerous rivulets which drain the neighbouring hills, and even affording an asylum to the waters of the Dee, although the latter assumes the appellation of river after entering the Ken. All these rivers rise in the north, and empty themselves into the Solway Firth or the Irish Sea. The smaller streams are the Fleet, the Tarf, the Deogh, and the Cluden. The Solway Firth, in a circular form, washes the coast of the stewartry, from the Nith to the Cree, a space of forty-five miles; and along the shore of this beautiful estuary the coast is bold and rocky, the cliffs in some instances rising to a great height. The principal towns in the county are now connected with the north and south by means of the Glasgow and South-Western Railway from Dumfries to Kirkcudbright, and the Caledonian line from Castle Douglas, on by Parton and Creetown, to Stranraer and Portpatrick.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—The shire, or stewartry, comprises twenty-eight parishes, and contains two royal burghs—Kirkcudbright and New Galloway; the latter in conjunction with Stranraer, Wigtown and Whithorn (in Wigtownshire), formerly sent one member to Parliament, but on the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, these towns were included in the counties to which they belong. The county returns one representative, the gentleman at present sitting being Sir Mark J. Stewart, Bart. In 1891-92, the parliamentary constituency numbered 5,700. The Lord-Lieutenant is Lord Herries. From the census returns for the year 1881, it appears the county of Kirkcudbright contained a population of 42,127, and by those for 1891, 39,979, showing a decrease during the last decade of 2,148. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was (exclusive of royal burghs) £325,900; railways, £18,019.

AUCHENCAIRN AND DUNDRENNAN IN RERRICK.

AUCHENCAIRN is a quoad sacra parish in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, the village being 8 miles s. from Castle Douglas, 10 e. from Kirkcudbright, and 21 s.w. from Dumfries, situated on the main road between the two last-named towns. It is much frequented during the summer months for its excellent bathing. Mines of barytes, copper and ironstone were at one time worked here with success. In the village are two hotels, which afford excellent accommodation to tourists and visitors. In the mouth of Auchencairn bay lies the small island of Heston, which stands high out of the water, and affords excellent pasture for sheep, and harbours rabbits in great numbers.

DUENDRENNAN is a small village in the parish of Rerrick, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles s.w. from Auchencairn, deriving its only importance from having in its vicinity the ruined Abbey of Dundrennan, the greatest attraction in this part of the country. This abbey, the venerable remains of which stand about a mile and a half from the sea, was founded by Fergus, Lord of Galloway, in the year 1142. The church was built, as usual, in the form of a cross, with the spire at the intersection rising two hundred feet. The nave and chancel were one hundred and twenty feet in length, and on the south side of the church were the cloisters, enclosing a grass plot. The buildings are greatly dilapidated, and are almost entirely covered with a pale grey-coloured moss, which gives a character of peculiar and almost airy lightness to the lofty columns and Gothic arches, many of which are entire.

The existing ruins testify to the admirable taste and architectural beauty which the building, when complete, must have displayed. The sacred edifice afforded a temporary shelter to Mary Stuart during the last hours she spent in Scotland. Tradition has traced with accuracy her course from Lan-side to the scene of her embarkation for England. She arrived here in the evening, and spent her last night within the walls of the monastery, then a magnificent and extensive building. The spot where she took boat next morning for the English side of the Solway is at BURNFOOT, the nearest point to the coast. It is situated in a little creek, surrounded by vast and precipitous rocks. The scene is analogously wild and sublime; and beside being inspiritive of melancholy associations in the mind of the poet or romantic tourist, the coast here and in the neighbourhood merits the attention of the painter and the investigation of the mineralogist. The entire parish of Rerrick embraces an area of 19,980 acres, and contained a population in 1881 of 1,807, and in 1891, 1,582.

CASTLE DOUGLAS IN KELTON,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BRIDGE OF DEE, KELTON HILL, GELSTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CASTLE DOUGLAS is a modern, neat and thriving town and burgh of barony in the parish of Kelton, parochial union and Commissary Court of Kirkcudbright, the town coinciding with the quoad sacra parish of the same name, 90 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 18 w. by s. from Dumfries, 15 n.e. from Gatehouse, and 10 n.e. from Kirkcudbright; situated on the road between Gatehouse and Dumfries, in a pleasant, fertile district, on the banks of the Carlinwark loch, and derives its chief importance from its weekly markets and extensive auction sales. It is a station on the Castle Douglas and Dumfries line of railway. At one time it was known as Causeyend Village; but in 1792 it was erected by the proprietor, Sir William Douglas, into a burgh of barony, and its government vested in a provost, two bailies, and seven councillors. At the beginning of the century it was composed of but a few detached houses; it has now a large number of respectable dwellings, laid out in regular streets, the principal one lining the public road. Altogether Castle Douglas may be considered one of the most respectable and prosperous market towns, although not of remote origin, in the south of Scotland. The Town Hall, a handsome structure, situated in St. Andrew street, is built of red sandstone, at a cost of £1,500. In connection with it is a Mechanics' Institute and reading room; and a court is held quarterly for the recovery of small debts, and a police court on the first Wednesday in each month. In the town are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Company Bank, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. A National Security Savings Bank, established in 1840, is a flourishing institution, and has been the means of doing much good. On the south-west side of the town are the ruins of the ancient castle of Threave; and on the south-east stands the modern and elegant mansion of Gelston Castle. Carlinwark loch, before mentioned, is upwards of a mile in length, and occupies one hundred and eighteen acres; before it was partially drained, however, by the canal cut from it to the river Dee, its area was much greater. It contains a number of small islands, and is plentifully stored with pike and perch. Two miles s.w. from Castle Douglas is Kelton parish church. It is a plain structure, with a belfry. The church is capable of accommodating about 550 persons. There are two Free churches in Castle Douglas, one with a red sandstone steeple, in King street, and the other situated in Queen street. Near Carlinwark loch stands the Castle Douglas parish church, a building of Gothic architecture, built in 1668, and enlarged in 1831. It has accommodation for 720 worshippers. There is also a United Presbyterian church, and the Roman Catholics have a commodious chapel. The Episcopal church, which is dedicated to St. Ninian, is a handsome granite structure, in the early English style of architure. There are two public schools, and one female school under private management in Castle Douglas. The principal public school, a neat building with small tower, erected in 1877, is situated near the top of Cotton street. Castle Douglas and its vicinity appear to have been the arena of much contest during the feudal system when the ancient Douglasses dwelt in the castle of Threave, and were lords of the district; for on the west side of the town are still visible encampments and breast works, evidently thrown up against the castle; and on the south-west bank of the loch is a spot still termed the "gallows lot," or "plot," said to have been the place of execution in former times. Near the head of the lake lived, it is said, a blacksmith named M'Kim, or M'Min, and his sons; they made the large cannon called "Mons Meg," shown at Edinburgh Castle; it was formed in staves, and hooped round like a cask. The market (a large one) for grain in winter, and cattle in summer, is held on Mondays. Fairs: February 13th, or the following Monday, for horses; the last Monday in March, for hiring servants; September 23rd, or the following Monday, for hiring and for horses, and November 13th, or the following Monday, for horses. The civil parish of Kelton comprises 11,222 statute acres, and contained in 1881 a population of 3,485, and in 1891, 3,692; the town of Castle Douglas having 2,870 of that number.

KELTON HILL, or Rhonehouse, is a small village in the parish of Kelton, and about 2½ miles s.w. from Castle Douglas. The extensive horse fairs formerly held here have been transferred to its more fortunate neighbour, Castle Douglas.

Nearly two miles from Carlinwark loch, in Kelton parish, is the small village of GILSTON or GELSTON and its castle, formerly called Douglas Castle, and then the seat of the proprietor, Sir William Douglas, the founder of Castle Douglas, and now the residence of Captain Alexander Morrough.

BRIDGE OF DEE is a small village and a station on the railway between Castle Douglas and Kirkcudbright, about 3 miles from the first-mentioned town.

CREETOWN,

KIRKMABRECK, PALNURE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CREETOWN is a small burgh of barony, in the parish of KIRKMA-BRECK, and union of Kirkcudbright, 117 miles s. w. from Edinburgh, 12 w. from Gatehouse, about 6 s. e. from Newton-Stewart, and 20 n. w. from Kirkcudbright. It was formerly called Ferry Town of Cree, and derived that appellation, doubtless, from its situation—the town being situated on the east side of the creek of the river Cree, at the head of Wigtown bay, and opposite the peninsula on which stands the town of Wigtown. It is a place of but little consequence as connected with commerce, the only trade it possesses being confined to the exportation of granite, which is worked by Messrs. Milligan and McMillan, the Mersey Docks and Harbour Trust, Mr. Robert Thomson, and Messrs. Constable & Co. The Waverley Hall, in St. John street, was erected by Thomas Adair, Esq., and is used for meetings, concerts, &c. Lead and copper have been found in the hills above the town, and at PALNURE, three miles distant, but the workings have been abandoned. The old mail road from Portpatrick to Dumfries passes through the town, and there is a station on the Portpatrick railway, within a mile distant. This place is the property of Miss McCulloch Grant, whose mansion is a great ornament to it; and there are some other handsome residences in the neighbourhood. The Established and United Presbyterian churches are neat structures; and the Roman Catholics have a place of worship here. The parish of Kirkmabreck embraces an area of 23,081 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,834, and in 1891, 1,599.

CROSSMICHAEL,

GREENLAW, PARTON, AND CORSOCK.

CROSSMICHAEL is a parish and village in the parochial union of Kirkcudbright. The village is a small one, 91 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 19 s.w. from Dumfries, and 9 s.s.e. from New Galloway, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Dee, which river is crossed, about a mile and a half from the village, by an elegant stone bridge, over which passes the high road leading to Laurieston and Castle Douglas, Crossmichael being distant 5 miles from the former, and 5½ from the latter. In the village is the parish church, the patron saint of which, prior to the Reformation, was St. Michael, and hence the name, though of the cross there are neither remains nor traditions preserved. The parish lies nearly in the centre of the stewartry, having the Urr water on the east, and the Dee on the west. Two small lakes, which have an outlet to the latter river, furnish good perch and pike fishing. In this parish is GREENLAW, formerly the residence of Robert, fourth Viscount Kenmure, who died in 1663 at the old fortress of Greenlaw, the remains of which still exist. Robert Gordon, son of William, sixth Viscount Kenmure, who was beheaded on Tower Hill, 24th February, 1716, succeeded to the estate in 1737; and finding the old tower in a very dilapidated condition, he commenced the erection of the present house, which he had not completed when he died, on the 10th August, 1741. From that time the estate of Greenlaw continued in the possession of the Gordons till 1880, when it was conveyed by sale to John Ross Coulthart, of Ashton-under-Lyne, in the county of Lancaster, banker. Since the death of Mr. Coulthart, the estate has been in the hands of trustees. Besides the remains of the old fortalice of Greenlaw, there are also in this parish the foundations of a large monastery, of which even tradition has not preserved the name, though it is said that the superstructure was removed to furnish materials for erecting the old castle of Threave, which stands at a very short distance. The Barony Isle of the river Dee is said to have been a consecrated spot in the days of the ancient Britons, where the Druids had a temple in the midst of a grove of oaks, from whence they administered sacerdotal rites and offered up human sacrifices. There is also pointed out in this parish a Roman burying place, several Pictish cairns, in which human bones have been found; and instances of British encampments, near which stone weapons of various descriptions have been discovered. The parish of Crossmichael encloses an area of 9,919 statute acres, and contained in 1881 a population numbering 1,333, and in 1891, 1,348.

PARTON parish lies along the banks of the Dee, that water being its western, and the Urr its eastern boundary; it extends from six to seven miles in length, its breadth varying from four to six, and embraces an area of 15,841 statute acres. A large portion of this parish is hilly, heathy, and pastoral, especially in the northern quarter; towards the Dee the land is flat and arable, and under cultivation. What may be called the village contains but a few houses. The church (a neat building erected in 1834) and the manse are about three miles from Crossmichael. The latter occupies a very pleasant situation fronting the river, and is surrounded by hills and woods. There are some handsome residences in this parish, among which may be mentioned Parton House and Alrds House. The population of the parish was in 1881, 716, and in 1891, 479.

CORSOCK, formerly in Parton parish, is now a parish of itself, for ecclesiastical purposes only. Population in 1881, 611, and in 1891, 474.

DALBEATTIE,

EARNBAROCK, BUITTLE, COLVEND, DOUGLAS HALL, HARDGATE, HAUGH-OF-URR, KIPFFORD, PALNACKIE, ROCKLIFFE, AND SOUTHWICK,

DALBEATTIE is a burgh and quoad sacra parish, locally in the parish of Urr and union of Kirkcudbright, 87 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 13½ m. by r. from Kirkcudbright, the like distance s.w. from Dumfries, and 6 m. from Castle Douglas, most eligibly situated on the Dalbeattie burn, a rivulet which falls into the Water of Urr, which latter is here navigable for vessels of 150 tons. The harbour, which is called Dub-o'-Hass, is about five miles from the Solway Firth. A line of railway from Dumfries to Portpatrick, Castle Douglas and Kirkcudbright, passes through this place and possesses a station here. The burgh has great advantages in respect to situation for a maritime trade, having a communication by sea with the western ports, and, by means of the before-mentioned railway, with many large inland towns; it possesses some large falls of water, capable of turning any kind of machinery. Paper, bobbin, and corn mills, and two for sawing timber are in operation, the whole propelled by water. Extensive granite quarries, granite polishing and granolithic works are in this neighbourhood, worked by Messrs. D. H. & J. Newall, Mr. D. Newall, Dalbeattie Co-operative Granite Co., Messrs. Fraser & Young, and others; and near the port are manure works and brick and tile works, the machinery of which is propelled by steam. In the town are places of worship for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Evangelical Unionists and Roman Catholics. There are also a mechanics' institute and reading room, Conservative and Liberal club rooms, public, female and Roman Catholic schools, branches of the Union Bank of Scotland and Commercial Bank of Scotland, four comfortable inns and a fine bowling green. About four miles north-east from Dalbeattie is Corra Castle, formerly the residence of Lord Herries, but now the property of the Maxwells, of Terregles. It is a fine ruin, and mentioned as the place where Mary Queen of Scots passed a night on her way for embarkation at Solway Firth to England, after the battle at Langside Moor. The government of the burgh is vested in nine commissioners, who are elected by the ratepayers of the three wards into which the burgh is divided under the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862. The town is lighted with gas. The parish of Urr contains an area of 15,426 statute acres, and in 1881 the population was 5,490, and in 1891, 4,589; of this number 8,348 were returned for Dalbeattie.

PALNACKIE (or GARDEN) is the principal village in the parish of Buittle, parochial union of Kirkcudbright, 18 miles s.w. from Dumfries, 14 n. from Kirkcudbright, and 6 s. of Castle Douglas, agreeably situated on the Water of Urr, where there is a good harbour, having at ordinary spring tides a depth of 30 feet of water, and capable of receiving vessels of two hundred tons burthen. Since the extension of the railway system in the stewartry, the fishing trade has greatly fallen away. It used to be the chief port for supplying the surrounding neighbourhood with coal and various other sea borne necessities. The parish is bounded on the east by Urr, on the south by the Solway Firth, and on the west by Kelton. It is a fertile and agricultural district, eight miles in length and three in breadth, and contains an area of 11,891 statute acres, with a population in 1881 of 991, and in 1891, 961.

COLVEND is a parish adjoining Kirkbean. It is entirely agricultural, and is only remarkable for its scenery. Along the coast of Colvend and Southwick there are several large caves, and three of the hills in the united parish exceed 1,300 feet in height. There are also several large heaps of stones, one of which, near Craigneuk Point, is called "Coulthart's Cairn," and is supposed to be connected in some way with the ancient Galloway family of Coulthart, of Coulthart, KIPFFORD, ROCKLIFFE, and DOUGLAS HALL are favourite bathing places, to which families from all parts of Scotland and England resort during the summer months. The parish has an area of 18,666 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,231, and in 1891, 1,127.

HAUGH-OF-URR is a picturesque village, agreeably placed on the Water of Urr, about 8¼ miles N.E. from Dalbeattie. In the neighbourhood are a waterfall called Spottes Lynn, a ferruginous well, and a romantic glen, interesting to the botanist and geologist. On the bank of the river, about a mile from the village, is the Moat of Urr, an artificial mound, surrounded by elevated circles and supposed to have been used in primitive times as a court of judicature. About half a mile from Haugh is the small village of HARDGATE.

GATEHOUSE-OF-FLEET,

AND PARISHES OF GIRTHON AND ANWOTH AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

GATEHOUSE is a neat modern town, partly in the parish of Anwoth, but chiefly in that of Girthon, and stewardry of Kirkcudbright, 105 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 50 miles E. of Portpatrick, 33 s.w. from Dumfries, and 8 n.w. from Kirkcudbright; charmingly seated in a romantic and fertile vale, embosomed within hills and lofty eminences, which form a spacious and delightful amphitheatre. Some of the hills have their sides clothed and their summits crowned with woods, interspersed with rich pasturage. The town is well built, regular and clean, the houses being generally of the same height, the streets running in straight lines and crossing each other at right angles. In High street stands a square tower of grey granite, 75 feet high, which had its origin in a sum of £80, left by Andrew Findlay, watchmaker, in 1867, for the purpose of erecting a public clock. During the four succeeding years this sum, by local subscription was increased until it amounted to £300, at which cost the tower was erected. The fine clock by which it is surmounted was supplied by Messrs. Gillett and Brand, of Croydon, at a cost of £160, and was presented to the town by H. G. Murray-Stewart, Esq., of Callay. A public hall has been erected in High street, at a cost of £1,400, obtained by public subscription. It contains a very fine oil painting by John Faed, R.S.A. of Ardmore, representing a charmingly picturesque view of the town, the old castle, and Rutherford's monument, with the hills and sea in the background. A good stone bridge crosses the Fleet, connecting the principal part of the town with that in Anwoth parish. At the foot of High street flows the river Fleet, which here meets the tide, and becomes navigable for vessels of 60 tons burthen. The navigation of the river was considerably improved by the late Mr. Murray, who, at a cost of £3,000, cut a canal in a straight line, which, besides deepening the river, reclaimed many acres of land, since which a commodious quay has been constructed. The exports of Gatehouse are principally grain, timber, and wood, and its imports lime and coal. There are some saw mills propelled by water power. Mines of lead and copper were some years since wrought to advantage; specimens of copper from the Enrick mine, shown at the Exhibition of 1851, were pronounced to be the richest in Europe. Gatehouse was erected into a burgh of barony in 1795, through the interest of the late Mr. Murray. The municipal government is vested in the Commissioners of Police.

The parish church, which is a commodious building, was erected in 1817. The Free church is a spacious and handsome building, and contiguous to it is a church for the United Presbyterians. A masonic lodge, a library, and a reading room well supplied with newspapers and periodicals, have their respective members and supporters. Barlay Mill, a short distance from Gatehouse, is the birthplace of the brothers James, John and Thomas Faed, the well-known artists. In this neighbourhood, in the parish of Anwoth, are the ancient castles of Rusko and Cardoness. There are traces of three Roman encampments in the parish of Girthon, and two in the parish of Anwoth, all within a radius of two miles. Rusko castle, now in ruins, is the reputed castle of the "Young Lochinvar," of Scott's ballads. On a hill near the town stands a plain stone monument or column, erected to the memory of Samuel Rutherford, the divine; it overlooks the church where he preached, and where, after service on Sunday, the members of the congregation used to play football and other games. The column first erected was struck and thrown down by lightning; in 1847, and the present structure was built soon after. There is excellent hotel accommodation in the town, the chief of which is the Murray Arms, and it was here that Burns wrote "Scots wha hae." The market day is Saturday, the cattle markets on second Saturday, monthly; and the fairs are held on the Saturday before the 29th of June and the last Saturday in September. The parish of Anwoth encloses an area of 11,774 statute acres, and that of Girthon 33,874 acres. In 1881 the former parish had a population numbering 728, and the latter 1,415; in 1891 the numbers were 724 and 1,354 respectively.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT,

WITH THE PARISHES OF BORGUE, TONGLAND AND TYNHOLM, AND THE VILLAGE OF RINGFORD.

KIRKCUDBRIGHT is a royal burgh, the capital of the stewartry, a parish, and in the parochial union of the same name, 100 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 55 E. from Portpatrick, and 28 S.W. from Dumfries. Some authorities derive the name from the ancient features of the locality Caer Cuthbert, meaning the fort, or castle, in the place of entanglement, the country at that early date having been very swampy. Others trace it to St. Cuthbert, the name, probably, having been Kirk Cuthbert, which has become corrupted to its present form. The town occupies a peninsula and situation on the east of the Dee, about 6 miles from the confluence of that river with the Solway Firth, and is of considerable antiquity; but of its origin there is no authentic record further than that St. Cuthbert's church was erected so long ago as about the eighth century. The establishment of this church was followed by the construction of a small fort by the lords of Galloway, which in after times was superseded by a castle in the proprietary of the Crown, by whose authority the place was put under the government of a constable. During the domination of the Douglasses in Galloway, Kirkcudbright became a burgh of regality under their influence; on their forfeiture, James II. erected the town into a royal burgh by charter dated at Perth, 26th October, 1455. This grant was renewed and confirmed by Charles I., on the 20th July, 1693, and the burgh has since been under the government of a provost, two bailies, and thirteen councillors, with a treasurer and chamberlain; it joins with Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar and Lochmaben in returning a member to Parliament, the present representative being Robert Threshie Reid, Esq., Q.C. The revenue of the corporation is considerably increased by the salmon fishings in the Dee and the rents of three farms in the neighbourhood; and the town derives a certain degree of consequence and advantage from being the seat of the Stewart and Commissary Courts. Kirkcudbright at the present day presents an aspect remarkably pleasing. Within, it is regular, clean, and neat, and externally it appears embosomed in the bountiful foliage of a fine sylvan country. It is composed of six or seven distinct streets, at right angles with each other; the houses, which are for the most part two storeys high, have a respectable and comfortable appearance, and bespeak the taste and easy circumstances of the inhabitants. The Sheriff Court House was erected on the site of the old Stewarty building, under the Sheriff Court House Act, at the joint expense of Government and the county. It has a very imposing appearance. The exterior is in the castellated style, with battlements and a projected tower in the centre, which harmonizes well with the tower of the old building behind; the interior has been fitted up in a manner at once elegant and substantial. On the ground floor are the offices of the procurator fiscal, the county and justice of the peace clerks' office, and police office; the second storey contains the court room, seated for 150 persons, and several other offices. The cost of the building was £8,588. From the old tower above mentioned, an extensive view may be obtained of the beautiful environs of the town, including the ivied ruins of the ancient castle of Kirkcudbright, built about 1680, by Maclellan, one of the Lords Kirkcudbright. The former gaol and court house is a very curious old edifice, with the market cross on the outside stair leading to its tower, and is supposed to date from about the middle of the sixteenth century. The prison erected for the Stewarty has been closed, the prisoners sentenced at the Kirkcudbright courts being incarcerated at Maxwelltown. The building was purchased by the Roman Catholics, who demolished it, and erected on its site a convenient and substantial structure, consisting of a chapel and school, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. The monetary transactions, which are considerable, are conducted by three banks, viz., the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. The burgh has a little shipping trade and a productive fishery. The shops and inns are very respectable; of the latter the Royal and the Commercial are the principal. The harbour is the best in the Stewarty; at the ordinary spring tides the depth of the water is thirty feet, and at the lowest neap-tides eighteen feet. The river is navigable for two miles above the town, to the Tongland bridge, built by Telford, and which is constructed of one arch of one hundred and ten feet span. A handsome iron bridge has been erected across the Dee at Kirkcudbright, at a cost of £10,000, raised partly by a bazaar and partly by assessment. It is of the bowstring lattice construction, its length being 500 feet by 23 feet broad, consisting of five fixed spans of 71 feet each, and a compound span of 98 feet, which latter turns on a cast iron cylinder filled with concrete, to allow of the passage of vessels of considerable burthen beyond the bridge. The piers, over which stands a square column, furnished with a tripod lamp-stand and globular lamps, are clustered columns, with fluted capitals, four of the columns being surrounded by an entablature, the whole forming a bridge of the most graceful description, and admirably suited by its irregular contour for the position in which it is placed, being at once in harmony and contrast with the surrounding picturesque scenery. The approaches are formed by curved parapets of cast iron, to which are affixed a copy of the old seal of Kirkcudbright, together with the names of the provost, Mr. Samuel Cavan; the chairman of the bridge committee, Mr. Murray-Stewart, of Cally; and the engineers and contractors. The work of construction was commenced in May, 1865, and the bridge was opened to the public, together with the new court house above described, with a great demonstration on July 8th, 1868. Previous to the erection of the bridge, passengers and carriages had to be ferried over in a flat-bottomed boat; in stormy weather, however, or when there was an excessive current, this mode of conveyance was not without danger. The railway to Castle Douglas is a branch of the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and gives ample accommodation to the district.

The Established church, with nave and transepts, and a tower surmounted by a spire, was erected in 1836. It is a very tasteful structure, built wholly of stone, and stands in the centre of a plantation, through which are public walks. A portion of the ancient church still remains, and is used as a school. It contains an monument of a former Lord Kirkcudbright, a recumbent figure of whom is in fine preservation. The Free church (of which the foundation stone was laid in August, 1872, and which adjoins the Johnstone Free school) is a building of whinstone, with red sandstone facings, erected on the sight of the former Free church. It has a square tower, surmounted by an elegant spire reaching to the height of 123 feet. The east and west ends are ornamented with windows with fine tracery. The church is 82 feet long by 48 wide, exclusive of transepts, with seats for 712 persons. A complete set of halls and offices is connected with the church. The cost of erection was upwards of £5,000. In St. Cuthbert street stands a handsome church, opened in 1880, in which the United Presbyterian congregation worship. It cost £3,300, raised by public subscription, and has accommodation for over 400 persons. In the rear of the church is a hall used for the Sunday school and church purposes. The Town Hall, constructed of freestone, in the Grecian style of architecture, was erected in 1879, at a cost of £5,600. The Town Council voted £2,500, the remainder being obtained by a bazaar and public subscription. It contains a library, reading room, museum, and lecture hall. The old United Presbyterian church has been converted into the Mackenzie Hall (founded by Mr. John Mackenzie, of this town), and is used for lectures, concerts, &c. The academy, or grammar school, is a plain old-fashioned edifice. The Johnstone Free school is a chaste stone building, with centre wings and tower. The environs of Kirkcudbright are truly delightful; the rising ground on each side of the river from Tongland to the sea are embellished with thriving plantations; and the general prospect, both marine and inland, is really lovely. St. Mary's Isle, a beautiful spot, a mile from the town, was the seat of the late Earl of Selkirk, but is now the residence of the Hon. Charles Hope. The burgh is amply supplied with all domestic necessities, and provisions are comparatively cheap. The market day is Friday. The parish of Kirkcudbright extends over an area of 12,280 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 3,479, and in 1891, 3,477.

TONGLAND or TONGUELAND is a parish in the union and Stewart court of Kirkcudbright, 3 miles N. therefrom. A parish church and a public school are here. Acreage, 9,738. Population, in 1881, 829, and in 1891, 844.

TARFF (for Gatehouse) is a station in the parish of Tongland, on the Kirkcudbright branch of the Glasgow and South-Western railway.

KINGFORD or RED LION is a small village in Tongland parish, situated on the road between Tynholm and Castle Douglas, about 5 miles N. from Kirkcudbright.

TWYNHOLM is a parish and village; the latter, a small one, is situated about 4 miles N. from Kirkcudbright on the main road from Gatehouse to Castle Douglas. The soil is fertile, and the surface of the district rises into many small hills, partly arable. Of the extensive woods with which this part of Galloway was formerly covered, the only remains now existing are around the old castle of Compstone, a building pleasantly situated on an eminence high to the junction of the rivers Dee and Tarff. The village contains a small neat church of the Establishment and a public school. Acreage, 10,484. Population in 1881, 681, and in 1891, 694.

BORGUE is a parish and village, forming the west side of Kirkcudbright bay, entirely agricultural. The village, a small one, about 4 miles S.W. from Kirkcudbright, consists of a few neat houses, and contains a Free church and a church of the Establishment, also a public school. The island of Ross, which rises at the mouth of Kirkcudbright bay, belongs to this parish, and on it stands a lighthouse. Acreage, 13,531. Population in 1881, 1,129, and in 1891, 1,120.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM,

CROCKETFORD, OLD BRIDGE OF URR, AND SPRINGHOLM.

KIRKPATRICK-DURHAM is a parish and village—the latter, a small one, is 85 s.w. from Edinburgh, 14 s.e. from New Galloway, 13 w.s.w. from Dumfries, 7 E. from Parton, and 5½ from Castle Douglas. The parish, which is skirted by the Urr water on its western side, derives its name from the old church, dedicated to St. Patrick, and Durham, a hamlet where it stood—the latter appellation signifying "the hamlet on the water." The church is in the Gothic style, with a tower, erected on the site of the old church, and built two centuries ago; there is also a Free church. Formerly a woollen mill furnished employment to many inhabitants of the village; but it is now undistinguished by manufactures of any kind, and it is a place of no trade but that which belongs to a few shops for the accommodation of the inhabitants. The parish, which is between nine and ten miles in length, and about four in breadth, encloses an area of 18,277 statute acres, partly pastoral and partly arable, the former character prevailing in the north, the latter in the south of the district. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 1,917, and in 1891, 927; of this number 406 were returned for the village.

CROCKETFORD (or NINE MILE BAR), a small village about 3 miles N.E. from Kirkpatrick, on the road from Dumfries, was founded towards the close of the last century by a sect known as the Buchanites, who believed that they would never die, and under the guidance of their leader Luckie Buchan, they were to be translated in a body to the New Jerusalem. Near this village is situated Auchenreoch Loch, a sheet of water about a mile in length; and on Larg Hill is a monument commemorative of the Covenanters who perished in defence of their principles.

OLD BRIDGE OF URR is a small village in the parish of and 2 miles from Kirkpatrick-Durham, seated on the banks of the Urr water, and contains but few houses, and with the exception of a small woollen manufactory, no business worthy of notice.

SPRINGHOLM is a small village one mile E. from Kirkpatrick, on the road from Dumfries. It contains a small chapel, built about the year 1806, by the Cameronians; and there is a woollen manufactory in the neighbourhood.

NEW ABBEY,

BEESSWING, CARSETHORN, KIRKBEAN, KIRKGUNZEON, LOCHRUTTON, MAINSRIDDLE, PRESTON MILL, SOUTHERNESS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW ABBEY is a parish and village in the union of Kirkcubright. The village, a small one, is 80 miles s. from Edinburgh, 12 E. from Dalbeattie, 30 E.N.E. from Kirkcubright, and 7 s. by w. from Dumfries, situated at the eastern extremity of the county near to the mouth of the Nith. The parish, which was originally called Kirkinder, takes its name from the once celebrated religious establishment of New Abbey, a monastery founded in the thirteenth century, for the Cistercian order of monks, by Dovergilla, daughter of Allau, Lord of Galloway. The ruins which occupy an area of two hundred and forty by one hundred and fifty feet, are supported on arches and Gothic pillars, and the area is used as a burying ground. The extreme outer walls, or precincts, are traced to an extent of fourteen acres. On the north and south lie the woods of Shambellie, and on the south Loch Kinder and the dark braes of Criffel, the lofty hill of which rises to the height of 2,000 feet above the sea, from which it is a mile distant. Besides that of Kinder, there are two other lakes in the parish, namely Lochend and Lochaber. Near the former is the spot where one of the early Covenanters of this district met an untimely end. The parish kirk, which was built with part of the material of the early Covenanter, stands on the north side of the ruins. On the Glen hill, a continuation of the Criffel range, stands a monument, erected in commemoration of the battle of Waterloo. It is fifty feet high, with a winding stair within, the base bearing an inscription laudatory to the British troops and their allies. BEESSWING is a small hamlet in the parish, situate about 6 miles n.w. of New Abbey village, and contains a Free church and a public school. The parish of New Abbey comprises an area of 18,199 acres, and in 1881 the population was 906, and in 1891, 866.

LOCHRUTTON is a parish lying 5 miles s.w. of Dumfries, its greatest length being five and a half miles by four and a half broad. It has an extremely hilly surface, at whose base lies the only village it contains, and the lake Lochfoot, from which the village derives its name. The fine sheet of water—one mile long by half a mile broad—supplies the inhabitants of Dumfries and neighbourhood with an unfailing supply of water. On one of the hills there still exist remains of a distinct Druidical circle. Acreage, 7,411. Population in 1881, 614, and in 1891, 554.

KIRKBEAN is a small parish and village, the latter, very considerable, being situated 5 miles s. of New Abbey and about 10 s.e. of Dumfries, in the northern part of the parish, about a mile from the sea. This little place possesses some notoriety, if not distinction, from having been the birthplace of John Paul, otherwise Paul Jones, a "sea adventurer," who was born in 1745, and was the son of a gardener in the place. The road between Kirkbean and Southwick, a distance of four miles, is considered one of the prettiest in the stewarty. On a clear day the Isle of Man and the Cumberland coast may be plainly seen. The conspicuous mountain called Criffel stands partly within the parish and partly within that of New Abbey, and there are within the former traceable ruins of the castles of Caven and Weath, both of which were the property and occasional residence of the Regent Morton. There are other small villages in the parish—MAINSRIDDLE, containing a Free and a United Presbyterian church; and SOUTHERNESS, a bathing village, the latter being situated at the extreme point of the coast, which runs to the Solway Firth. On the point is a lighthouse. CARSETHORN and PRESTON MILL are small hamlets also in this parish, both about a mile distant from the village of Kirkbean; the former is a favourite resort for bathers in the season. Acreage, 7,987. Population of Kirkbean parish in 1881, 794, and in 1891, 714.

KIRKGUNZEON is a parish lying 8 miles w. from New Abbey, and is a station on the Castle Douglas and Dumfries Railway. Acreage, 11,956. Population in 1881, 656, and in 1891, 739.

NEW GALLOWAY,

BALMACLELLAN, DALRY, AND CARSPHAIRN.

NEW GALLOWAY is a small town and royal burgh, in the parish of Kells, and union of Kirkcudbright, 84 miles S.S.W. from Edinburgh, 24 W. from Dumfries, 18 N.E. from Newton-Stewart, 14 N.W. from Castle Douglas, 8 N.W. from Parton, and 20 N.W. from Kirkcudbright, pleasantly situated on the west bank of the river Ken, over which was thrown in 1821 an elegant stone bridge of five arches; this structure lying in the valley below the town, has a very pleasing effect. At its completion a dinner was given by the late Lord Viscount Kenmure, to 14 of the oldest inhabitants of the town, whose united ages amounted to 1,264 years. The houses of the town stretch along the public road, and form a tolerably well-built street. The business of the place is confined to the local domestic and handicraft branches. Galloway's burghal charter was conferred by Charles I., and the municipal government is vested in a provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. The sheriff's court is held three times a year. The Town Hall is situated in the centre of the town, and has a public clock. On the north side of the town, within a distance of half a mile, is the parish church, a neat stone edifice, with a square tower in the centre, built in 1822; in the same year a Sunday school was established, in which upwards of 100 children are taught. The churchyard contains an ancient tombstone having the armorial ensigns of the Colclharts and MacTurks curiously sculptured upon it, and a Covenanters' monument. At a short distance south of the town stands the ancient castle of Kenmure, once a place of considerable strength; Mary Queen of Scots lodged in it one night, on her way from this country to England. Loch Ken, which adjoins the town, is four miles and a half long, and in many places more than a mile broad; it abounds with pike and perch. The nearest railway station is five miles distant. The parish of Kells embraces an area of 48,581 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 970, and in 1891, 985; of this number 891 were returned for New Galloway.

DALRY (or ST. JOHN'S) is a village in the parish of its name, lying on the east bank of the river Ken, 2½ miles N. of New Galloway, the same distance from Balmaclellan, and 24 miles N. of Kirkcudbright. The southern portion of the district is in a beautiful valley, composed of rich arable land; the high grounds are pastoral, and graze considerable numbers of cattle and sheep. The village of Dalry (the name of which signifies "the dale of the king") is surrounded with delightful scenery; and there is a good hotel (the Lochinvar) at the command of the visitor. In 1858 the Public Hall (or St. John's Hall) was erected, and is used for the purpose of holding public meetings, lectures, &c. It was built by subscription, at a cost of nearly £400. In the churchyard is a stone erected to the memory of two Covenanters, with the following inscription:—

Behold! Behold! A stone's here forced to cry
Come see two martyrs under me that ly!
At Water of Dee who slain were by the hand
Of cruel Claverhouse and his bloodie band.
No sooner had he done this horrid thing

But's fore'd to cry, Stewart's soul in heaven doth sing.
Yet, strange! this rage pursued even such when dead,
And in the tomb of their ancestors laid,
Causing their corps be mov'd out of the same,
Discharging in churchyard to bury them.
And this they did 'cause they would not perjure
Our covenants and Reformation pure,
Because, like faithful martyrs, for to dy
They rather chus'd than treacherouslie comply
With cursed prelacy, the nation's bane,
And with indulgence our churches stain,
Perjur'd intelligencers were so rife,
Shew'd their curs'd loyalty to take their life.

There are several lakes in the parish; the largest, Lochinvar, covers an area of 50 acres; in the lake stand the remains of an ancient castle, formerly belonging to the Gordons, Knights of Lochinvar, and latterly Viscounts of Kenmure. The area of the parish is 84,585 acres, and its population in 1881 was 988, and in 1891, 948.

CARSPHAIRN, a parish and village, 18 miles N. of New Galloway, and 32 N. of Kirkcudbright, is situated near the river Deogh; the village contains a parish kirk, the manse, a parochial school, and a few scattered houses. The parish is somewhat extensive, but thinly populated; it is the most northerly and mountainous district in the stewartry, and is chiefly devoted to grazing. This parish, with those of Dalry, Kells, and Balmaclellan, are designated the district of Glenkens—famed for the true breed of black-faced sheep and black cattle, as also for good horses of the Galloway breed. Acreage, 54,624. Population in 1881, 484, and in 1891, 594.

The small village of BALMACLELLAN, about 2 miles E. of New Galloway, in the parish of its name, stands on the opposite side of the Ken to New Galloway, not far from the confluence of that stream with the head of Loch Ken, 12 miles S.W. of Monikie. The parish is of a moory character, interspersed with some considerable lakes. Acreage, 23,019; population in 1881, 987, and in 1891, 689.

LANARKSHIRE,

OR as it is sometimes designated CLYDESDALE, is a large, populous, and highly important manufacturing district, in the western part of the Lowlands or southern division of Scotland, bounded by Dumfriesshire on the south, the counties of Ayr and Renfrew on the west, those of Dumbarton and Stirling on the north, Linlithgowshire and Edinburghshire on the south-east, and Peebles on the east. Its extreme length (from south-south-east to north-north-west) is somewhat more than fifty miles, and its greatest breadth in the middle (from east to west) is about thirty-four miles; it includes within its area 889 square miles, or 568,868 acres, of which 4,584 are under water. In size Lanark is the eleventh of the Scottish counties, and in population the first. At an early period this extensive district was, for convenience, divided into two wards, called the Over Ward and Nether Ward, Lanark being the chief town and seat of justice of the former, and Rutherglen of the latter; this arrangement was altered during the last century, when the county was divided into three wards, namely, the Upper, the Nether, or Lower, and the Middle Wards, the chief towns being Glasgow, Lanark, and Hamilton, each district being subject to the jurisdiction of a sheriff-substitute. The central part of the county throughout is termed Clydesdale, or the Vale of Clyde, from being the basin of that beautiful and useful river, of which we shall say more hereafter. Throughout the arduous struggle for Scottish independence, Lanarkshire was the theatre of many miseries and military excesses. Under the reign of James I. a portion of the county was taken from it, and formed into the district of Renfrew. At a subsequent date the turbulence of the Douglases, with the intrigues of the first Lord Hamilton, involved Lanarkshire in the various calamities consequent upon intestine warfare; it subsequently became subject to a thirty years' civil commotion, stimulated by the prosecution of the more zealous Presbyterians of this district by Charles I.; the revolution of 1688, however, was the harbinger of a more tranquil future, and it has ever since advanced in wealth and every species of improvement.

SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, CLIMATE, &c.—The upper division of the county is very mountainous; from Tinto, looking northwards, the face of the country is softened down to gentle elevations and gradual depressions. The Upper Ward, which may be deemed three-fifths of the county, is mostly hilly and moorish; and from the nature of the soil and the altitude of the surface cannot be considered susceptible of much agricultural improvement. At the commencement of the Middle Ward the elevation of the land is obviously diminished, while the declivity continues descending towards the north-west; the surface is everywhere diversified by frequent inequalities, so as to leave no level space except the valleys along the river; indeed the Middle Ward, though esteemed a good agricultural district, is nearly one-third moss land. The Lower Ward is of very limited extent, and derives its justly-acquired importance from being the seat of a most abundant population. The commencement of improvement in soil and cultivation in this part of Scotland was not apparent until about the middle or nearer the end of the eighteenth century; from this period draining, planting, and enclosing took place in various districts; wheat, barley, and oats (the two latter more abundantly) are produced from different soils in the county; potatoes are planted in considerable quantities; turnips are sown pretty generally, and artificial grasses are profusely raised in every direction. Some flax is likewise grown, which is spun by females, who dispose of the yarn in the markets of Lanark, Biggar, Carwarth, and other places. Gardens and orchards occupy many acres of land, particularly on the banks of the Clyde; in this part they are of the most luxuriant growth, the orchards consisting chiefly of apple, pear and plum trees. In the neighbourhood of Carluke strawberries are also grown in abundance. The inhabitants of the inland and upland districts rear and graze great numbers of black cattle and sheep, and the Clydesdale breed of horses is well known. The climate, although varying considerably in different situations in the low-lying districts, in the vicinity of the Clyde is mild and temperate; but in the uplands in the south, south-west, and south-east the weather is more severe. In mineral productions, Lanarkshire is, perhaps, the richest in Scotland. Gold, to an important amount, was, at an early period, found in this county, and in later days, on the sides of a rivulet called the Wenlock, small pieces of that precious metal, in a pure state, have frequently been picked up from among the sand and soil brought down by the torrents from the precipices and slopes of the mountains; particles of gold have also been found in Crawford Muir, with some large pieces of lapis lazuli. At present plentiful supplies of lead may be had in the parish of Crawford; and coal, ironstone, limestone, freestone, sandstone, whinstone, fire-clay and a variety of other metallic, mineral and fossil substances are to be obtained abundantly in different districts of the county. The lead mines belonging to the Earl of Hopetoun, at Leadhills, afford employment and maintenance to a large number of workmen. Owing to the discovery of large quantities of bituminous shale, the manufacture of paraffin oil has been extending very rapidly in the neighbourhoods of Airdrie, Lanark, and other places, and bids fair to become one of the most important trades in the district. GLASGOW being the paramount seat of the manufactures for which Lanarkshire is so eminently distinguished, it is unnecessary in this article to treat of the subject at any length, as under the head of that most important city notice will be taken of whatever is connected with its commerce and products. It need only be stated in this place that the cotton goods for which Glasgow is the vast depository are to a very considerable extent woven in different villages and parishes in the county, and that this branch of manufacture alone yields support to a very large proportion of the dense population. Mention may here, however, be made of the very extensive works in several places in the shire for the manufacture of pig and malleable iron and steel tubes and boilers, besides which there are large engineering, brick, tile and terra cotta, paper, and many and various other kinds of work.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS, AND RAILWAYS.—The principal river is the noble and pre-eminently useful Clyde, which is formed by the concentration of a number of straggling burns and rivulets rising amid the mountains and issuing from the waters which separate Lanarkshire from the counties of Peebles and Dumfries. The chief of these tributaries are the Powtrail water, the Grook burn, and the Even and Elvan waters; these coalescing compose a stream that, after flowing about two miles, receives an accession—first from the highest springs of its fountains, and next from Duneaton water, which constitute properly the river Clyde, at a distance of upwards of twelve miles, dividing the county into two nearly equal parts, and ultimately falls into the Firth of Clyde, opposite the Isle of Bute. It ranks amongst the largest rivers of Scotland, and is navigable for vessels of one thousand tons burthen as far as the city of Glasgow. It waters and conduces to the fertility of delightful valleys, and in its progress forms several falls and cascades of a picturesque and romantic character, particularly “the falls of Clyde,” which, with the beautiful scenery around, possess an almost irresistibly attractive influence on the minds and over the feelings of visitors for pleasure and admirers of natural loveliness. On either side the grand river receives a variety of tributaries, all of them respectively of important advantage in their application to the machinery of manufacturing and agricultural mills. The most prominent of these secondary rivers within the shire are the Douglas water, the Mouse, the Nethan, the Avon, the Calder, the North Calder, and the Kelvin. There are other streams, of still less magnitude and consequence, as the Elwin, the Little Clyde, the Cotten, and the Logan. The greatest elevations of this county, with their altitude above the level of the sea, are:—The Lowther Hills, 2,450 feet; Tinto, 2,236; Culter Fell, 1,700; Welstoun Mount, 1,550; Leven Seat, 1,250; and Dickmont Hill, 700. The numerous lines of rail which permeate this county have given such facilities for the transmission of its products and its wants as to cause considerable changes in its character, and also in the relative position of a large portion of its population.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Lanarkshire comprises (including the city parishes of Glasgow) forty-nine parishes and two parts of parishes, which form four presbyteries in the Synod of Glasgow & Ayr; it contains five royal and parliamentary burghs—Glasgow, Airdrie, Lanark, Rutherglen, and Hamilton. Previous to the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, the county returned two representatives to the Imperial Parliament, but on the passing of that measure was apportioned into six divisions, and was given four additional members. Glasgow, which up to that time had sent but two members, was also separated into seven divisions, with the privilege of electing one representative for each. The royal burgh of Lanark, in conjunction with Hamilton and Airdrie in this county, Linlithgow, in the county of that name, and Falkirk in Stirlingshire, also contribute another member. The gentlemen at present sitting for the county are—Govan Division (number of voters, 11,451), John Wilson, Esq.; Partick Division (11,453), James Parker Smith, Esq.; North-Western Division (11,408), Alexander Whitelaw Graeme, Esq.; North-Eastern Division (12,645), Donald Crawford, Esq.; Mid Division (10,496), J. W. Phillips, Esq.; South Division (8,818), James H. C. Hozier, Esq. The Lord-Lieutenant is the Earl of Home. The county, according to the census returns for 1881, contained a population of 904,412, and by those for 1891, 1,045,787, showing an increase in the ten years of 141,375. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 (inclusive of railways and canals) is; Upper Ward, £857,258; Middle Ward, £989,718; Lower Ward, £958,767; total, £2,285,738.

AIRDRIE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CALDERBANK, CLARKSTON, DRUMGELLOCH, GLENMAVIS, GREENGAIRS, LONGRIGGEND, MOFFAT, RAWYARDS, STAND, PLAINS, CALDERCRUIX, WHITERIGG, NEW MONKLAND, AND CHAPELHALL.

AIRDRIE is a thriving market and post town and a burgh of barony, separated from the parish of New Monkland, and erected into a quoad sacra parish, 18 miles N.N.E. from Lanark, 32 W. from Edinburgh, and 11 E. from Glasgow; elegantly situated on the great or middle road between the two cities, and occupying a rising ground with its principal slope to the west. The advance of Airdrie has been rapid, and it is now a town of considerable importance, its commercial prosperity being attributable to the opening up of rich fields of coal and ironstone in the district. Amongst the chief industries of the town may be mentioned the extensive boiler and engineering works of Messrs. Inglis, Hossack & Co., the iron and steel forge of Messrs. Sutherland & Co., and the locomotive works of Messrs. Martyn Brothers; there are also other firms engaged in the various branches of engineering and iron and brass founding, besides an extensive cotton mill. The country is intersected in every direction by railroads for the transmission of coal, &c. to the various ironworks, and to Glasgow, with which city, and every part of the kingdom, communication is now largely maintained. The Monkland Canal also approaches within a mile and a half from the town. Hand loom weaving, which at one time occupied large numbers in the town, is now almost extinguished by the introduction of steam power. Paper making is carried on at Moffat and Caldercruix, as is also calico printing at the last-named place; and there are oil works at Whiterigg, railway wagon works at Rawyards, and a number of stone quarries and brick yards in the district. Branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal, the National, the Clydesdale, and the British Linen Company Banks are settled here, as well as a bank for savings. The Royal Hotel, situated in the centre of the town, is a first-class commercial and posting house, and is within a few minutes' walk of both railway stations. The shops for general supply are well stored with every necessary article for the demand of a busy population. The Airdrie Advertiser and Coatbridge Express are highly respectable newspapers, printed and published here weekly, by the firm of Messrs. Baird & Hamilton.

The burgh consists of several principal streets, with others of a smaller class diverging from them; it is built on a regular plan, has many excellent houses, is lighted with gas, and well supplied with good water. It possesses a town hall, ornamented with a spire and clock. There is also a handsome pile called the County Buildings, in which the sheriff court is held every Thursday and Friday; a justice of peace court every Monday and Thursday, and in which are also the offices of the sheriff clerk, the clerk of the peace, the procurator fiscal, and other public functionaries. The new Monkland parochial board chambers are now (February, 1893) being erected in North Bridge street; the building, when completed, will be a handsome one, and its probable cost about £2,000. A new Public Free Library is about to be erected in Anderson street, and will consist of a reading room, library, reference room, museum, and picture gallery. The style of architecture will be Roman, with rusticated basements and Doric pillars, the estimated cost being about £5,000, towards which Mr. Carnegie has contributed £1,000, the remainder being raised by subscription. Mr. G. Arthur, of Airdrie, is the architect. The burgh is governed by a regular bench of magistrates, composed of a provost, four bailies, and fifteen councillors, with a treasurer and town clerk; it unites with Falkirk, Hamilton, Lanark, and Linlithgow in returning one member to Parliament under the name of the Falkirk Burghs, the present representative being Harry Smith, Esq.

The places of worship comprise those for the Established church, the Free church, United Presbyterian church, Congregational, Wesleyan, Reformed Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, Baptist and Roman Catholic bodies. The town has several good schools, among which is the Airdrie Academy, opened in 1848, and erected at the sole expense of the proprietor, Mr. Alexander, of Airdrie House, at an outlay of upwards of £2,500; it is situated on the south side of the town. In the surrounding neighbourhood are many neat modern villas and handsome residences. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November. The population of the burgh in 1881 was 13,963, and in 1891, 15,133, and of the municipal burgh, 19,135.

CLARKSTON is a village in the parish of New Monkland, 2 miles Airdrie, on the principal road between Edinburgh and Glasgow, containing a church of the Establishment and a Board school.

CALDERBANK is a considerable village in the parish of Old Monkland, about 2 miles S. from Airdrie. Here are situated the extensive works of The Calderbank Steel and Coal Co., Limited. A new Board school has recently been erected at a cost of about £4,000. Population in 1881, 1,749, and in 1891, 1,945.

CHAPELHALL is a village in the parish of Bothwell, but in the postal district of Airdrie; it lies about one mile E. from Calderbank. There are two places of worship, one for Free Presbyterians and one for Roman Catholics; also two schools. Population in 1881, 1,829, and in 1891, 1,950.

GLENMAVIS is a village in New Monkland parish, one mile and a half from Airdrie. The parish church and schools are situated here.

GREENGAIRS is a village in New Monkland parish, 4½ miles N.E. from and in the postal district of Airdrie. There are a Free church, an Established church, and a Board school here. The village is situated in an extensive coal district. Population in 1891 about 1,500.

LONGRIGGEND is a village in the parish of New Monkland, 5½ miles N.E. from Airdrie. There are an Established church, a Free church, and a Board school. Mining is the chief occupation of the inhabitants.

PLAINS is a small village one mile and a half E. from Clarkston, in the parish of New Monkland, and is a station on the Monkland branch of the North British railway. There are two forges in the neighbourhood for the manufacture of shovels, &c., and a short distance further east, at CALDERCRUIX, are extensive calico printing and paper works. Population in 1891 about 1,000.

AND THE PARISHES OF CULTER, COVINGTON AND THANKERTON (UNITED), KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON AND GLENHOLM (UNITED), SKIRLING, SYMINGTON, WANDELL AND LAMINGTON (UNITED), WISTON AND ROBERTON (UNITED), AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BIGGAR is a small neat town in the parish of its name, in the Upper Ward of Lanark, 23 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 31 s.e. from Glasgow, 16 w. from Peebles, and 12½ s.e. from Lanark, situate on the road between the two last-named towns. The town, which consists principally of a spacious and tolerably neat built main street, was created a baronial burgh by charter of James II. to Lord Robert Fleming of Biggar, in the fifteenth century. It greatly owes its prosperity to a large and populous neighbourhood. The buildings are handsome, and the shops are well laid out, the whole being lighted with gas by a company formed in 1839. The Caledonian Railway Company in 1858-9 constructed a single branch line of rails from their main line at Symington, passing through Biggar and terminating at Peebles, a distance of about 20 miles. This line is very advantageous, and adds greatly to the benefit of the inhabitants of Biggar and surrounding neighbourhoods. There are a few good inns, an auction mart, and three banking establishments—branches respectively of the Commercial, the National and the Royal Bank of Scotland. The town is well supplied with pure water, conveyed from a source five miles distant, the former supply, after an analysis, having been found to be of an impure description. In 1545 Lord Fleming founded and endowed a collegiate church for a provost, eight prebends, four singing boys, and six poor men. It was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and built in the form of a cross in a plain Gothic style; this ancient place of worship is now the parish church. There are also two United Presbyterian churches, one of which has been re-built in a handsome style. At a short distance from the town are still to be seen some remains of Bognall Castle, the once feudal stronghold of the Fleming family, and the principle residence of successive lords of that name, until late in the seventeenth century, according to several accounts, some of which are traditional. Its next possessors were the Elphinstones, through whose neglect it fell into decay. At a comparatively recent date, however, it has been subjected to greater destruction than time would have wrought, for its walls have been pulled down, and the materials carried off to form the drains and dykes in the neighbourhood; the antiquarian would now find it difficult to trace out its former extent, for latterly the plough of the husbandman has passed through its once spacious courts. Tradition reports a bloody engagement to have taken place near this town between the Scots, under Wallace, and the English army, when that distinguished leader drove the latter into a morass, where most of them perished. The parish is six miles in length by three and a half in breadth, embracing 7,272 statute acres, having the river Clyde on its western boundary, Peebles-shire on the east, and the parish of Covington on the west. The weekly market is held on Monday; and the fair on the last Thursday in January and October, third Thursday in July (old style), and last Thursday in April. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,128, and in 1891, 1,902.

CULTER is the next adjoining parish to Biggar, on the south west, having the river Clyde passing through it. It is also a station on the Peebles-shire branch of the Caledonian railway. A library and reading room, containing 1,400 volumes, has just been erected by Alexander Kny, Esq., of Cornhill, the site being given by R. G. Baillie, Esq., of Culter Allers. Agriculture and sheep farming appear to be carried on extensively. Several handsome residences and tastefully-wooded grounds contribute to the beauty of the scenery, which is here bold and attractive. The portion of the parish of Culter formerly situate in Peebles-shire was, by order of the Boundary Commissioners, separated from the parish of Culter and added to the united parishes of Kilbucho, Broughton and Glenholm. This order came into force on 14th May, 1891. The parish of Culter, which contains an area of 11,400 acres, is now wholly situated in Lanarkshire. Population in 1881, 574, and in 1891, 559.

COVINGTON and THANKERTON are united parishes on the north-west bank of the river Clyde, the parish church being situated about 6 miles n. from Biggar. Extensive tracts are here devoted to pasture, and the remaining portions to tillage. At the small village of Thankerton there is a station on the Caledonian line of railway. There is a public library here, which contains upwards of 2,000 volumes; it was established in the year 1799. The principal landowners are Sir Simon M. Lockhart, Bart. of Lee, and Sir Wudham

C. J. C. Anstruther, Bart. of Carmichael. The united parishes contain an area of 5,114 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 444, and in 1891, 396.

KILBUCHO, BROUGHTON and GLENHOLM are also united parishes partly adjoining and stretching along east and south of Biggar; but although in the county of Peebles, they are within the postal district assigned to Biggar. A succession of lofty eminences here meet the eye in every direction, and most of the hills being clothed with verdure to their summits, vast numbers of sheep graze over them. At the neat hamlet of Broughton there is a station on the Peebles branch of the Caledonian railway, 4½ miles s.e. from Biggar. There are an Established church, a Free church, and two Board schools; a post and money order office has been opened at Broughton, that at Rachen Mill being continued as a receiving office. The principal landowners are the Rev. William Welsh, of Mossfennen; James Tweedie, Esq. of Quarter; and Sir James M. Naismith, Bart. of Powso. The area of the united parishes embraces 18,565 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population numbering 635, and in 1891, 537.

SKIRLING is a parish and small village of the same name; the latter, in which stands the parish church, is about 2 miles e. from Biggar, and, although belonging to Peebles-shire, it is within the postal district and presbytery of Biggar. The general features of the district are of the same hilly and undulating character noticeable throughout the surrounding country, but in a more advanced state of cultivation. The parish is about 3 miles long by 2½ in width and contains an area of 3,423 statute acres. The whole of the land in the parish belongs to Sir Thomas Carmichael, Bart. Population in 1881, 274, and in 1891, 216.

SYMINGTON is another of those rural parishes, about 3 miles s.w. from Biggar. It is watered by the river Clyde, and is a junction on the Caledonian railway, at which the Peebles line branches off. The most striking feature throughout this district is the mountain of Tinto. There is an Established church and a Board school. Acreage, 8,504. Population in 1881, 462, and in 1891, 432.

WANDELL and LAMINGTON are united parishes close to the Caledonian line of railway, the village of Lamington being 6 miles s.w. from Biggar. In addition to the parish church, there is an Episcopal church, built by the Right Hon. Lord Lamington, whose seat, Lamington House, is in close proximity. A post and money order office is situated in the village; there are also a Board school and one for females supported by the Countess of Lamington. The mountain of Tinto, 2,336 feet, and Conter Fell, 2,890 feet above sea level, are the loftiest eminences in this very romantic neighbourhood. Acreage, 12,820; population in 1881, 916, and in 1891, 805.

WISTON and ROBERTON are united parishes, the former about 3 miles s.e. from Lamington railway station, and the latter 7 miles s.e. from Biggar. Acreage, 13,140. Population in 1881, 562, and in 1891, 497.

BLANTYRE.

UNDER the name BLANTYRE there is comprised three villages—viz., HIGH BLANTYRE, LOW BLANTYRE and STONEFIELD. The first of these is a small ancient village, 8 miles s. by e. from Glasgow, and between 2 and 3 w. by n. from Hamilton, situated on the road between the last-named town and East Kilbride. The second village, LOW BLANTYRE, rather more than a mile distant in a north-easterly direction, was built and is owned by Messrs. Henry Monteith & Co., dyers, whose large establishment (one hundred and fifty years old) is close at hand, and has an extensive frontage to the river Clyde. The works are, however, now (1893) at a standstill. Adjoining are the premises of Messrs. Robert Kerr & Co., cotton manufacturers. It may be interesting to know that at one time this village contained quite an independent and separate community, having gates which still exist, and which used to be shut at night. It had also a church, graveyard and school of its own. Of late years, however, this isolation has been entirely discontinued. It was in a small house of a row in this village that Dr. Livingstone, the celebrated African explorer and philanthropist, was born, both he and his father having been employed in the mills. STONEFIELD, the third village, lying about midway between the other two, is entirely the creation of the coal trade, and principally inhabited by the miners employed in the numerous pits in the neighbourhood belonging to the large coal masters—Messrs. Merry & Cuninghame, Messrs. Baird and Messrs. Dixon, Limited. It was in one of the Blantyre pits that the great explosion of 22nd October, 1877, took place, causing the death of over two hundred men and boys. The destitution and suffering consequent on an event of this kind were vastly diminished by the creation of a large relief fund, which the country in sympathising benevolence subscribed, and which still exists to alimnt the widows and orphans. These villages are situated in a rich fertile district, in the middle ward of the shire. A new Free church has been erected at Stonefield on the site of the old one, at a cost of about £2,000. There has also been built a new Board school for the infants' department at a cost of £1,350. The parish of Blantyre has a front to the Clyde of about two miles and a half, and extends six miles in length; it embraces an area of 3,954 acres. To the south of High Blantyre, near the farm of Park, and in a very picturesque locality, is a spring strongly impregnated with sulphur; the water is of similar quality to that of St. Bernard's well, near Edinburgh. It was formerly much resorted to, and is still efficacious in the cure of scrofulous and scrofulic cases. On the south bank of the Clyde, directly opposite to Bothwell Castle, on a rocky eminence, stand the ruins of the once splendid priory of Blantyre, founded early in the thirteenth century. At the reformation, the priory was demolished, and its revenues, with the patronage of the parish church, given by James VI. to Walter Stewart, afterwards lord treasurer of Scotland, and created a baron in 1606, with the title of Lord Blantyre. The family is distinguished in both Scottish and British history. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, is established here. Population of Blantyre parish in 1881, 9,760, and in 1891, 11,332.

BOTHWELL AND UDDINGSTON,

WITH THE HAMLET OF FALLSIDE.

BOTHWELL is an ancient village, in the parish of its name, situated on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, between 8 and 9 miles S.E. from the former, and between 2 and 3 N.W. from the latter town. The Caledonian and North British railways each have a station here. The parish is about eight miles and a half long by four broad; the great roads from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and from Glasgow to Carlisle, pass through it; and besides the river Clyde, it is intersected by the two Calder, which are beautifully skirted with wood. Throughout the parish coal is found in abundance, and several collieries are in full operation. Near the village, towards the west, on the side of the Clyde, is the modern mansion of Baron Douglas of Douglas and Earl of Home, standing in the midst of shrubberies and plantations; contiguous to which, on an eminence, is the magnificent ruin of Bothwell Castle, once an important Scottish fortress, much admired by all visitors. About half a mile from the town is the Glasgow District Asylum, formerly conducted as a private asylum under Dr. Dean Fairless. The institution was bought by the Glasgow District Board of Lunacy in 1878, and after undergoing extensive alterations, was opened in 1881 as a district asylum for pauper patients; it contains over two hundred beds. The road to Hamilton is carried over the Clyde by means of Bothwell Bridge, a name famous in Scottish history from this being the spot on which the Duke of Monmouth routed a formidable army of Covenanters, on the 22nd of June, 1679. The ancient church of Bothwell was founded by Archibald "The Grim," Earl of Douglas, in 1398, with liberal endowment for a provost and eight prebendaries. An elegant church was erected by the heritors of this parish; it is in the Gothic style, and exhibits a fine appearance as seen on approaching the village from Hamilton. There is a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, here, and a Board school, a convent school, and a private academy. The area of Bothwell parish is 13,644 acres, and its population in 1881 was 25,466, and in 1891, 31,482, of which number Bothwell village contained 2,400.

UDDINGSTON is a thriving village in the parish of Bothwell, 4 miles N.W. from Hamilton. The road from Glasgow to Carlisle passes through the village; and there is a station on the Caledonian and also one on the North British Railway. There are iron foundries and establishments for the manufacture of agricultural implements. The village is lighted with gas, and presents an appearance of neatness and good order. The places of worship are for Established, Free, United Presbyterian, Evangelical Union, Episcopal, and Roman Catholic denominations. There are also three public and two private schools. Branches of the Bank of Scotland, and British Linen Company Bank are established here. Population in 1881, 3,542, and in 1891, 5,099.

FALLSIDE is a hamlet in the parish of Bothwell, about 1 mile N.E. from and in the postal district of Bothwell village, with a station on the Caledonian Railway.

CAMBUSLANG,

WITH NEWTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CAMBUSLANG is a rising town, in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Hamilton, about 4 miles S.E. from the former place, and lying on the banks of the Clyde. In consequence of the introduction of gravitation water in 1872, and the convenience of railway accommodation to and from the city of Glasgow, a large number of well-to-do Glasgow business people have come to settle in the place. The works of Messrs. T. P. Miller & Co. turkey red dyers, afford employment to the female working portion of the population. The large and extensive works of the Steel Company of Scotland, Limited, together with a number of coal pits that have been opened up, have contributed very materially to the growth and population of the town. The "Auld Kirk," as it is termed, prior to the Reformation belonged to a prebend of Glasgow Cathedral; there was also at that time a chapel dedicated to the Virgin Mary; in 1565, the chaplain, Sir John Millar, made grants of the property endowed for its support; these lands are still called "chapel lands." Besides this edifice there are now two other Established churches, two for United Presbyterians, a Free and a Congregational church, and a Baptist and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the People's Bank of Scotland, Limited, established here. There are also handsome schools under the School Board. In the south-east portion of the parish lies the famous "Dechmont Hill," of which Sir Walter Scott records that "Wight Wallace (meaning Sir William Wallace) stood on the Dechmont Hill, and blew his bugle round, till the wild ball in Cadzw wood had started at the sound." Cadzw wood, or forest is in Hamilton parish, a distance of four miles away, where a famous breed of wild, white cattle were kept by the noble house of Hamilton, and where some of the same breed are to be seen to this day, as it is said a condition of the title of the dukedom of Hamilton to the estate is that a specimen of the breed should be retained in that forest. The annual agricultural show of the Cambuslang, Blautyre, and Rutherglen Agricultural Society is held at Cambuslang, on the Queen's birthday, and is a great gala day in the town. The parish, which embraces an area of 5,160 acres, had in 1881 a population of 9,447, but in 1891 had increased to 15,358.

NEWTON is a small hamlet in the parish of Cambuslang, 2 miles distant from the village of that name. It has a station on the Caledonian line, close to which are the extensive works of the Steel Company of Scotland and the Clyde Nail Co. Limited.

CARLUKE AND BRAIDWOOD,

WITH THE HAMLETS OF KILNCADZOW AND LAW.

CARLUKE is a small town (formerly a burgh of barony), in the parish of its name, 32 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 20 s.e. from Glasgow, 10 s.e. from Hamilton, and 5 n.w. from Lanark. The parish, which lies on the north-east bank of the Clyde, is said to derive its name from St. Luke, to whom its old parish church was dedicated. The adjunct Car signifying a stronghold or castle; the former was ruinous before the Reformation, and of the latter no traces remain to mark its site. The town contains several regular streets, Kirkton street, High street, and Hamilton street, each having a number of fine stone buildings, and the shops are lighted with gas. The Rankin Memorial Hall, situated in High street, is a handsome building, erected within recent years, partly by subscription, the remainder, £1,000 and a free site, having been given by James Brownlie, Esq., Glasgow. Besides the parish church there is a Free church, one each for United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, Evangelical Unionists, and Roman Catholics, and also a number of schools. Few districts are richer in minerals—coals, ironstone and limestone—than that of Carluke, all of these being of the best quality. The trade of the town and neighbourhood is chiefly confined to mining. Two branch banking establishments are settled here—the British Linen Co. Bank and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited; also a well-conducted Savings bank, which has greatly encouraged industry and provident habits among the inhabitants at large. There are also two steam corn mills, several brickworks, the extensive preserve factory of Messrs. B. & W. Scott, two engineering works, an iron foundry, and three firms who carry on business as timber merchants. The banks of the Clyde have long been famous for the culture of fruit trees. Apples, pears and gooseberries are produced in great abundance, and in higher perfection in this district than in any other in Scotland, and quantities of the last-named fruit are annually disposed of at very remunerative prices. As a proof of the richness of the soil, may be mentioned the growth of strawberries, which of late years have been cultivated more extensively than in any other part of Scotland, and now form a prominent feature in the produce of the district. A large portion of the produce is usually purchased by the jelly and preserved fruit manufacturers, whilst great quantities are forwarded to the Glasgow markets. The margin of the river is adorned with many beautiful mansions and tastefully arranged pleasure grounds, and the beauty of the woodland scenery in this part is justly admitted. That profound mathematician, Major-General William Roy, was a native of this parish. Fairs are held on the 21st of May and the 31st of October. There is also a great cattle show held here yearly, on the last Wednesday in July. The parish has an area of 15,345 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 8,552, and in 1891, 8,059, the town of Carluke containing 4,096 of that number.

BRAIDWOOD is a small village in the parish of Carluke, 3 miles s.e. from that town, situated about half a mile to the right of the road leading to Lanark. A large chemical works, owned by Mr. James Martin, Carluke, is in operation; the same gentlemen having also two large steam saw mills, at Braidwood and Carluke respectively. Four brick and tile works comprise the other industries of the place. A little to the north-west of the village is Braidwood House, a handsome stone mansion, and about half a mile nearer to the Clyde is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, apparently of the eleventh and twelfth centuries, consisting of a tower and keep in good preservation; but of the origin or uses of the structure tradition and history are alike silent. The building, which is partly inhabited, was a few years ago thoroughly repaired. It is called by the country people Ha'-Bar (Hall Bar). Besides Braidwood there is the hamlet of KILNCADZOW, at which place there is a board school. LAW, a mining village, and quoad sacra parish, is 2½ miles n. of Carluke. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. There is also a Board school. Law has now a very fine railway station, being a junction, which here connects the Caledonian main line to England, and the south of Scotland with the new line to Perth, Stirling, and the North. There are two preserve factories established here.

CARNWATH AND CARSTAIRS,

WITH AUCHENGRAY, BRAEHEAD, DOLPHINTON, DUNSIRE, FORTH, HAYWOOD, LIBERTON, NEWBIGGING, PETTINAIN, WALSTON, WILSONTOWN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CARNWATH is a village or small town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, 25 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 27 S.E. from Glasgow, 7 N.W. from Biggar, and the same distance E. from Lanark, situate on the main road between the latter town and Edinburgh. It consists of one street, nearly three-quarters of a mile in length. About the centre is the tolbooth, a plain old building, in front of which is the cross, an obelisk, whereon the distances from Edinburgh to various places in Clydesdale and Ayrshire are distinctly marked. Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhart, Bart., of Lee and Carnwath, is superior of the burgh. The estate is held of the crown, on payment of a pair of red hose, which are run for annually on the day succeeding the August fair, and followed by athletic games, to the successful competitors for superiority in which are awarded medals and prizes in money. The church stands at the west end of the town, contiguous to a fragment of the ancient edifice, which prior to the Reformation belonged to the cathedral of Glasgow. The stone frame of the north window is still entire, and presents a fine specimen of masonry in the Gothic style. Another portion of the old building is now used as a sepulchre for the Lockhart family; it contains the remains of the former lords of the manor, the Somervilles, and a tomb on which a Lord Somerville is represented lying in complete armour along with the figure of his wife in the exact costume of the fifteenth century. The present church was erected in 1866, upon the site of the former one built about 1798. It is a handsome freestone building, of the Gothic style of architecture, and will accommodate 1,000 persons. About a mile to the north-west of Carnwath, are the scattered ruins of Cowthally Castle, in former ages the seat of the Somervilles. The Caledonian Railway Company have a branch line, commencing from the main line at Carstairs Junction, passing through Dunsyre and terminating at Dolphinton, the whole distance being eleven miles and a quarter. There is also a branch line to Haywood and Wilsontown. The market, which is on Friday, is principally for meal. Fairs are held on the last Friday in February (new style), for hiring servants; the first Wednesday in April, for show of stallions, seeds and plants; the first Thursday in July (old style), for horses and cattle; the second Wednesday in August, for horses and cattle; and the Friday before the 31st of October, for hiring servants. The following villages in Carnwath parish may be briefly noticed, viz.,—AUCHENGRAY, 5 miles N.E. of Carnwath, and a station on the Caledonian line. There are an Established Mission church, a Board school, and post office here. BRAEHEAD, 3 miles N., where there are a United Presbyterian church and a Board school. FORTH, 5½ miles N.; there is a branch of the British Linen Co. Bank established here. HAYWOOD and WILSONTOWN, the latter 6 miles N. from Carnwath. At each place is a station on a branch of the Caledonian line. In the village of Haywood there is a Board school, and at Wilsontown there is a Free church and a subscription school. The parish, which embraces an area of 30,446 statute acres, had in 1881 a population of 5,831, and in 1891, 5,824.

CARSTAIRS is a small village in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Edinburgh to Lanark, 4 miles N.E. of the latter town, 3 W. of Carnwath, and about a mile E. from Carstairs Junction on the Caledonian railway. This was evidently a place of some consequence at the time of the Romans, from the number and magnitude of architectural and other remains of that people which have frequently been turned up when digging below the surface. The cottages of this rural village have a remarkably neat appearance, being tastefully adorned with shrubs and flowers at the expense of the proprietor of the place. At some short distance from the village, embosomed in thriving plantations, is Carstairs House, the family mansion of Joseph Monteith, Esq., of Carstairs, the principal landowner. The three fairs which were formerly held here, having gradually declined, are now altogether discontinued. Acreage, 9,520. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,955, and in 1891, 1,977.

DOLPHINTON and WALSTON are adjoining parishes of a pastoral character, the former 9 miles E. from Carnwath. The North British Railway Company have a station here. The places of worship are the parish and Episcopal churches, whilst at Walston there are the parish church and a Free church. There are Board schools in each village. Acreage: Dolphinton, 3,574; Walston, 4,361. Population in 1881: Dolphinton, 292; Walston, 340; in 1891, the first-named place contained 248, and the latter, 301 persons.

DUNSYRE (from dun-syrth, a steep hill), is a rural parish, bounded by Dolphinton and Walston on the south, and Carnwath on the west and north-west, and is a station on Dolphinton branch of the Caledonian line of railway. The district lies high, and is chiefly devoted to pasture and agriculture. The village, with the parish church, stands in the south-east part of the parish, on the high road. From the twelfth century to the Reformation the parish was a rectory of the monks of Kelso. Acreage, 10,748. Population in 1881, 254, and in 1891, 191.

COATBRIDGE,

WITH PORTIONS OF THE PARISHES OF OLD MONKLAND AND CADDER, INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF CARNBROE, CHRYSTON, GARNKIRK, GARTCOSH, GLENBOIG, MUIRHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COATBRIDGE is a populous town and burgh in the parish of Old Monkland, situated on the Glasgow and Edinburgh road, 8 miles E. from Glasgow, and 2 W. from Airdrie. Although but a few years ago this place was of trifling importance, yet by its local advantages, which consist in abundance of coal and ironstone, it has now become very populous, and its well-stored shops and busy streets give it the appearance of a thriving town. The North British and Caledonian railways pass through the place, as does the Monkland canal, and they add very considerably to the wealth of the locality by affording ready transit to its productions. In the vicinity are five establishments for the manufacture of pig iron—viz., Gartsherrie, Calder, Carnbroe, Langloan, and Summerlee Iron Works, all of which are on an extensive scale, and afford employment to large numbers of the inhabitants. Several firms are engaged in the manufacture of malleable iron and steel, and the making of iron tubes is likewise very extensively carried on in this district. There are also several large engineering and iron founding establishments. The Clydesdale, the National, the Royal, the Union, and the Commercial Banks have each a branch located here. A handsome pile of buildings for the purposes of a town hall is now (1892) in course of erection, having its main entrance in Dunbeth-road. Close to the Town hall stands the Technical School, a substantial stone building, erected by the Old Monkland School Board, at a cost of about £7,000, and the first of the kind built in Scotland under the Technical School Act. The school was opened in 1891. At Gartsherrie, near the works, a fine Institute has been erected at a cost of £5,000; being the magnificent gift of William Weir, Esq. of Kildonan. The building is of stone, and contains spacious reading and billiard rooms, swimming and private baths, &c. There are places of worship for various denominations, and the educational requirements of the locality are met by Board and other schools. In 1881, Coatbridge had a population of 17,500, but in 1891, it had increased to 30,065.

OLD MONKLAND is a parish divided into three districts for registration purposes, and extends from the right bank of the Clyde to the border of New Monkland, a distance of between seven and eight miles, by a breadth near the Clyde of little more than one, but afterwards expanding to nearly four miles. It is bounded on the north by Cadder and the barony parish of Glasgow, and on the south by Bothwell. This is one of the most productive parishes in Lanarkshire; it is well enclosed and cultivated, and until commerce, that destroyer of sylvan beauty, made such rapid strides, was one of the most beautiful and finely-planted in the county. The whole of the parish is rich in minerals. The area of Old Monkland parish is 10,935 acres, and in 1881 its population was 37,283, and in 1891 44,615.

CARNBROE is a small village in the parish of Bothwell, a mile and a half from Coatbridge, its postal district. The works in the neighbourhood afford employment to a large number of the inhabitants. Calder is the nearest railway station, about a mile distant.

CHRYSTON, a compact little village pleasantly situated, standing on a considerable elevation, is in the parish of Cadder, about 6½ miles from Coatbridge. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits. Garnkirk is the nearest railway station, at a distance of a little over a mile.

CADDER parish extends along the northern boundary of Lanarkshire, having Kirkintilloch and New Monkland on the east, New Kilpatrick on the west, Campsie on the north, and the barony parish of Glasgow on the south. Great improvements have been made in this district in agriculture. This progressive benefit has been accelerated by the great canal between the Forth and the Clyde, which passes through the parish for five miles, whilst the river Kelvin washes its northern boundary to the extent of six miles. The North British and Caledonian railways pass through this parish. The discovery of coal on the estate of Calder, and coal and very valuable fire clay on that of Garnkirk, has materially enhanced the price of land. MOODIESBURN is a small village in this parish, which comprises an area of 13,969 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 6,965, and in 1891, of 8,232.

GARTCOSH is a somewhat scattered village in the parish of Cadder, about 4½ miles from Coatbridge. The Post Office is at the railway station which is on the Caledonian line.

GARNKIRK, in the parish of Cadder, is situated on the Caledonian railway, about 6 miles E.N.E. from Glasgow, and 8½ N.W. from Coatbridge; this place is important from the Garnkirk Fire Clay Works being situated here. This is perhaps one of the largest and most complete manufactories of fire clay in Great Britain. There are about 500 men employed in mining and manufacturing the material. The quality of the fire clay on this property is quite equal to that of Stourbridge, and the bricks, furnace blocks, retorts and crucibles find their way in large quantities to all parts of America, Germany, Holland and Russia. The manufacture of glazed pipes for water and sanitary purposes and of ornamental articles, such as chimney cans, vases and fountains, is also extensively carried on at this establishment. Population in 1881, 782.

MUIRHEAD is a small village in the parish of Cadder, situated about 6 miles from Coatbridge, lying between Garnkirk, its nearest railway station, and Chryston. The nearest post office is at the latter village.

GLENBOIG (or Garnqueen) is a village about 3 miles N. from Coatbridge, and a station on the Caledonian railway. Here are the immense works of the Glenboig Union Fire Clay Co. Limited. In the formation of this company the works of the Glenboig, the Glenboig Star and the Cambernald were amalgamated, and they are probably the largest manufacturers of fire bricks, blocks, &c., in the world. Fire bricks are also manufactured at Gartverrie, half a mile distant, and in this vicinity coal is also plentifully obtained. At ROBROYSTON, Sir William Wallace was betrayed into the power of Edward I. by Sir John Monteith, who, according to tradition, was bribed for that purpose by the English Court. Population in 1881, 994.

DOUGLAS AND RIGSIDE.

DOUGLAS, a village of great antiquity, is 41 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 31 a.s.e. from Glasgow, 15 n. from Leadhills, 12 s. from Lanark, and 8 s. from Lesmahagow; situated nearly in the centre of the parish of its name, on the south side of the Douglas water, and on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. The parish of Douglas takes its name from the stream that flows through it—the British words Dhu glas signifying the “dark blue stream,” and this is descriptive of the colour of the water. From such an etymology, is derived the once dreaded and still noble name of Douglas (of this ancient family copious and interesting particulars will be found in Messrs. Chambers’ “Gazetteer”). In the vicinity of the village, on the bank of the river, stands Douglas Castle, the residence of the Earl of Home, surrounded by extensive plantations. The old castle of Douglas was burned down in 1760; the following year the present edifice was begun to be erected in a magnificent style, from a plan by the late architect, Adam, but only a part of the original design has yet been completed. The village consists of several narrow irregular streets, formed without any regard to order on uneven ground. Near the centre, in the village burial place, stands all that remains of the ancient parish church. In a vault belonging to the original structure are to be seen monuments of some of the great chiefs of the house of Douglas; several of these highly merit the investigation of the curious in sepulchral sculpture. Besides the parish church, there is a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. There are three Board schools in the parish, besides one for females, supported by the Countess of Home. The village is well lighted with gas. The inhabitants in general were at one time employed in hand-loom weaving for the Glasgow manufacturers, but this industry is almost extinct. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland have each a branch establishment here. The parish throughout is prolific with limestone, freestone and coal; of the latter mineral there are extensive seams, many of which are seven feet thick. The district is well watered; besides the Douglas there are three minor streams, which merge in that river previous to its falling into the Clyde, about seven miles below the village. Fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Friday in March, the first Friday after Whitsuntide, the third Friday in October, and the third Friday after Martinmas for hiring servants. The parish, which embraces an area of 34,137 statute acres, had in 1881 a population numbering 2,641, and in 1891, 2,266

RIGSIDE is a small village in the parish of Douglas, 4 miles n. therefrom, situated on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr. In its neighbourhood are several collieries, and it also abounds with rich and productive beds of ironstone, limestone and fire-clay. A Free church was built in 1885, with a manse attached, at a total cost of about £1,500, in the Gothic style of architecture. The church is a compact and neat edifice, and will seat about 200. There is also a Board school in the village.

HAMILTON,

WITH THE PARISH OF DALSERF, AND THE VILLAGES OF AYR ROAD, LARKHALL, NETHERBURN, QUARTER, GREENFIELD AND BURNBANK.

HAMILTON is an ancient town, royal burgh, and the capital of the parish of its name and of the middle ward of the county; 87 miles W. by S. from Edinburgh, 10½ S.E. from Glasgow, 15 N.W. from Lanark, 8 S. from Airdrie, and 7 N. from Strathaven. It occupies an eligible site on the road from Glasgow to Carlisle and Edinburgh and Ayr, and a pleasant situation in a highly-cultivated country, washed by the Clyde and the Avon. The town lies along the base of a rising ground, extending nearly a mile in length, and consists of several streets of substantial, well-built houses, not very regularly disposed, but handsome in appearance, and the whole town has an air of comfort, respectability and activity. Of late years many improvements have been effected in the burgh and neighbourhood, and it is rapidly increasing in population and importance. A line of street has been opened through the town, forming part of the London road; a bridge called Cadzow bridge has been thrown across the ravine, thereby avoiding the lower part of the old town, and two lines of railway have been laid down from Glasgow, which have proved the means of opening the vast mineral field in the neighbourhood of Hamilton. Among the public buildings will be recognised the Town Hall, in the form of a Roman temple, with appropriate offices, and a gaol. The Victoria Hall, in Quarry street, almost opposite the Central Station, a fine building of red freestone, was erected in 1857, by the advocates of temperance, at a cost of £4,000; the main hall is capable of accommodating 1,500 persons. The place is well lighted with gas, and there are works for supplying the inhabitants with water. The moderate distance of Hamilton from Glasgow has facilitated the introduction of weaving cotton goods to a large amount. There are seven banking establishments prosperously settled in this burgh, viz., branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the People's Bank of Scotland, Limited. In the fifteenth century Lord Hamilton erected the town into a burgh of barony. Queen Mary created it a royal burgh in 1543, but after the Reformation the rights and privileges thus acquired from the Crown were resigned into the hands of William, Duke of Hamilton, who, in 1670, restored to the community its former franchises, and erected it into a burgh of regality dependent on him and his successors. The government of the burgh is vested in a provost, four bailies, and ten councillors; and in connection with Lanark, Airdrie, Falkirk and Linlithgow it sends a representative to Parliament, the present member being H. Smith, Esq. The justices of peace hold regular courts for the trial of minor offences.

The places of worship are those of the Establishment, and Free United Presbyterian, and Episcopal churches, and Independent and Roman Catholic chapels. The old parish church was made collegiate in 1451, by Sir James Hamilton, for a provost and prebendary, and has always been the place of sepulture of that family. The great object of attraction in this part of Lanarkshire is the palace of the Duke of Hamilton and its surrounding pleasure grounds. The pictures, ornaments, &c., belonging to his Grace were disposed of by auction in London in the month of June, 1882. In the middle of the great park, one mile from the town, on a rock overhanging the Avon stand the ruins of Cadzow Castle, the ancient manor house. The park is well stocked with deer, and contains a number of stately oaks. Among the charitable institutions of Hamilton is a hospital, situate in Muir street, for four old people, endowed by the late Mr. Aikman, of Ross; there are likewise an orphan school, some friendly societies and a Masonic lodge. In the vicinity, to the west of the town, on the road to Bothwell, are spacious and handsome barracks, and on the banks of the Clyde is an extensive racecourse, on which horse races occasionally take place, and the meetings are noted as among the best attended in Scotland. QUARTER is a small village in Hamilton parish, two miles distant from that town. The weekly market for Hamilton is held on Friday. The hiring and cattle markets are held on the third Friday in April and the third Friday in October; and the annual cattle show about the beginning of June. The parish of Hamilton, which embraces 14,243 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 23,333, and in 1891, 31,493.

DALSERF is a parish in the middle ward of Lanarkshire on the west bank of the Clyde; its greatest length is 6½ miles, and its greatest breadth 4½. The soil is generally fertile and well cultivated. The only village deserving notice in the parish is LARKHALL, 8½ miles from Hamilton, on the great road from Glasgow to Carlisle. In this village many looms are employed in the weaving of fancy fabrics for Glasgow houses. The large bleach works of Messrs. D. G. Miller & Co. are also situated here, and find occupation for a large number of hands; altogether the parish has every appearance of prosperity. There are several very extensive collieries in the parish, which give employment to the majority of the inhabitants. Dalsert parish embraces 6,956 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 9,878, and in 1891, 11,325; of the latter number Larkhall contained 8,580.

HOLYTOWN AND BELLSHILL,

WITH GREENHILL, MOSSEND, NEWHOUSE, SALSBURGH, TILLINGBURN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HOLYTOWN is an extensive village and quoad sacra parish dis-joined and formed into a separate ecclesiastical district, though still rated in the parish of Bothwell for parochial purposes; it is also in the middle ward of Lanarkshire, and 10 miles E. from Glasgow. The village derives its chief support from the extensive collieries in the neighbourhood, and from the works belonging to the Summerlee & Mossend Iron & Steel Company, A. & J. Stewart, and Clydesdale Limited, and the Millwood Iron and Steel Company, Limited, which give employment to a large number of persons. Here are an Established church and a Board school. A station on the Caledonian railway is within half a mile of the village. Population in 1881, 1,482.

BELLSHILL is a large and thriving village consisting chiefly of one main street over one mile and a half in length, situated in the parish of Bothwell, one mile W. from Holytown, on the through road to Glasgow, and deriving its chief support from the ironworks and numerous collieries in the vicinity. The Caledonian and the North British Railway Companies have each a station here, and there are branches of the Bank of Scotland and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. There are several schools, and places of worship belonging to the Established church, Free church, United Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, Evangelical Union and Primitive Methodists.

NEWHOUSE is a hamlet 2 miles E. from Holytown. Here are situated the works of the Legbrannock District Collieries Co. Limited.

GREENHILL is a small village about 4 miles E. from Holytown and one from Omoa station. There is a Board school in the village, and extensive collieries in the neighbourhood.

SALSBURGH, Sallysburgh, or Salzburgh, is a village in the parish of Shotts, 5 miles E. from and in the postal district of Holytown. The Coltness Iron Company have several collieries in the district. One mile east is the parish church of Shotts. The Original Secessionists have a place of worship near here. At Shotts Kirk two fairs are held annually, on the third Tuesday in June, and the last Tuesday in November, both old style. Population in 1881, 576.

TILLINGBURN is a hamlet near to the village of Greenhill, about 4 miles E. from Holytown and 2 from Omoa station, on the Cleland and Mid-Calder branch of the Caledonian Railway. The works of Mr. James Munro, artificial manure manufacturer, are situated in this hamlet.

KILBRIDE (EAST),

CARMUNNOCK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILBRIDE (EAST) is a village and burgh of barony in the parish of its name, situate on the road from Glasgow to Muirkirk, 8 miles s. from the former city by road, and 10½ by rail, the like distance n. from Strathaven, between 6 and 7 w. from Hamilton, and 45 w. by s. from Edinburgh. There is a station here on the Glasgow and East Kilbride branch of the Caledonian railway. The parish, which comprehends the abrogated one of Torrance, contains some extensive lime-works, and coal also lies beneath the surface. The places of worship are the parish kirk, the United Presbyterian church, and the Free kirk. Kilbride has produced several eminent men, among whom are Dr. William Hunter and his brother John Hunter, the celebrated anatomist and physiologist. There are several Board schools. A market is entitled to be holden here on Monday. The cattle show, which is held on the second Friday in June for Clydesdale horses and Ayrshire cattle, is the only fair that takes place in East Kilbride. East Kilbride parish, which embraces 22,760 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 3,975; and in 1891, 3,781.

The parish of CARMUNNOCK lies on the north-western confines of the county, on the east bank of the White Cart river, having Kilbride on the south and Cambuslang on the east; it is four miles in length by three in breadth. The ground is partly arable and partly pastoral, the banks of the Cart presenting some fine woodland scenery. On the estate of Castlemilk (the proprietors of which are supposed to be lineal descendants of the royal house of Stuart) are the remains of a Roman military road; and many tumuli have been met with, which when opened have always been found to contain human bones and instruments of war. In the house of Castlemilk, which is noted for its fine situation, Mary Queen of Scots is said to have lodged the night before the battle of Langside. There is a place of worship for the members of the Established church, and a Board school. The parish supports its own poor by voluntary assessment. The nearest railway station is at Busby. Acreage, 3,479; population in 1881, 722; and in 1891, 703.

LANARK,

WITH NEW LANARK, KIRKFIELD BANK, THE PARISH OF CARMICHAEL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LANARK is a royal burgh, a market town, and the seat of a presbytery, and has given its name to its parish and county. It is the chief town in the Upper Ward of Lanarkshire, situated on the main road leading from Stirling to Carlisle, one mile above the left or east bank of the river Clyde, distant 32 miles s.w. from Edinburgh 25 s.e. from Glasgow, 15 s.e. from Hamilton, and 11 n.w. from Biggar. There is a branch of the Caledonian railway connecting the burgh with the main line at Carstairs, affording easy communication with Edinburgh and Glasgow, and also by direct route with Ayr on the west. The burgh of Lanark is a place of considerable antiquity; its name Lanark, Lanerk, Lanerrick, indicates that its original inhabitants were of Celtic race, probably belonging to the Cymric or Welsh people. Kenneth III. is said to have here convened in the year 978 the first assembly of Parliament mentioned in the history of Scotland. Its original charter seems to have been granted by Alexander I.; and in the reign of Malcolm it appears to have been regarded as a royal burgh, many of the ancient kings of Scotland having made Lanark their place of residence. At one period there certainly stood a castle, on an apparently artificial mound, at the foot of the Castlegate, the summit of which elevation is now converted into a public bowling green. But Lanark possesses historical interest chiefly as being the scene of the first decisive military enterprise of Sir William Wallace. Sir Walter Scott in his "Tales of a Grandfather" gives the following account of it:—Wallace was at this time married to a lady of that place, and residing there with his wife. It chanced as he walked in the market place, dressed in a green garment, with a rich dagger by his side, that an Englishman came up and insulted him on account of his finery, saying a Scotsman had no business to wear so gay a dress, or carry so handsome a weapon. It soon came to a quarrel, as on many former occasions; and Wallace, having killed the Englishman, fled to his own house (at the head of the Castlegate), which was speedily assaulted by all the English soldiers. While they were endeavouring to force their way in at the front of the house, Wallace escaped by a back door, and got in safety to a rugged and rocky glen, near Lanark, called the Cartland Craggs, all covered with bushes and trees, and full of high precipices, where he knew he would be safe from the pursuit of the English soldiers. In the western face of the chasm, a few yards above the bridge which spans the Mouse Water, a cave in the steep bank on the left of the stream is pointed out by tradition as having been the hiding place of Wallace. In the meantime the governor of Lanark, whose name was Hazelrigg, burned Wallace's house, and put his wife and servants to death; and by committing this cruelty increased to the highest pitch the hatred which the champion had always borne against the English usurper. Hazelrigg also proclaimed Wallace an outlaw, and offered a reward to anyone who should bring him to an English garrison, alive or dead. On the other hand, Wallace soon collected a body of men, outlawed like himself, or willing to become so, rather than any longer endure the oppression of the English. One of his earliest expeditions was directed against Hazelrigg, whom he killed, and thus avenged the death of his wife. To a spectator standing in front of the parish church and beside the Jubilee fountain, it will be apparent that all the older streets of the burgh radiate from the "Cross" as centre. These ancient streets are the High street, Wellgate, Castlegate, Broomgate, Bloomgate, Wyde Close. The High street, wide, spacious and noble looking, extends eastward to the "Port," and is continued by St. Leonard street which leads to Caistairs, and by Bannatyne street, conducting to the railway station. Hope street, a comparatively new street, branches off from Bloomgate and leads to Cleghorn. Westport is a continuation of Bloomgate and conducts to the old and new Carlisle roads. The burgh is encircled by a series of narrow lanes, called the North Vennel, the South Vennel, The Delves, Friars' or Arnold lane, Greystonewalks, &c. Formerly the general occupation of the inhabitants was hand-loom weaving; this industry has, however, of late greatly decreased. The manufacture of wineys, skirtings, &c. is carried on by two firms, and there is a brewery conducted by Messrs. Thomas Gilroy & Co.; a tannery, four branch banks, and several good inns, of which the largest is the Clydesdale Hotel. Close to the station is the fancy wood-work establishment of Messrs. Mackenzie & Meikle, where a great variety of fancy and tastefully ornamented articles in wood are made; and beyond it, to the east, is a very fine auction and cattle mart belonging to the firm of Messrs. Lawrie and Symington, at which are held the largest sales of live stock in the south of Scotland. Behind the Clydesdale Hotel are the Assembly Rooms, erected in 1827 on the site where stood in pre-Reformation days an ancient monastery under the rule St. Francis. The County Buildings, erected in 1836 at a cost of £5,000, are situated in Hope street, and are a great ornament to that part of the town. They are built in the Grecian style of architecture, with a noble front of freestone, and comprise commodious court-rooms and appropriate offices. As a royal burgh (whose charter was finally confirmed by Charles I. in 1632), the town is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and nine councillors. It unites with Falkirk, Hamilton, Linlithgow, and Airdrie in returning one member to Parliament; the present representative being John Sinclair, Esq. The Grove, Co. Antrim. A sheriff court is held in the County Buildings every Monday and Thursday during the session, and small debt and debts recovery court on Mondays. Here also are held the meetings of the County Council for the Upper Ward.

The places of worship consist of the parish church, which is in the centre of the main street, and a quoad sacra church at St. Leonard's; an Episcopal church in Hope street; an Evangelical Union church in the Westport; a United Presbyterian church in Hope street; another in Bloomgate; and a Free church. A Roman Catholic chapel occupies a prominent position in the east of the burgh near the Lady-acre. In a niche over the eastern door of the parish church is placed a statue of Wallace, executed by Forrest, a self-taught genius and a native of the district, and presented by him to the town. In front of this church there has lately been erected, by public subscription, a fountain in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, 1887. The ruins of the old parish church, situated in the midst of the old burying ground, on the south-east border of the town, have been deserted for nearly one hundred and twenty years. Tradition asserts, that in this structure, at public worship, the heroic Wallace first saw the lady, Marion Braidfoot, who subsequently became his wife. In the cemetery which surrounds the ruins of the church was interred William Lithgow, a celebrated and eccentric traveller of the reign of James VI. After his peregrinations through a great portion of Europe and Asia, he came home miserably mutilated by order of the Spanish Inquisition, and settled in his native parish till his death. The educational institutions are Arnold Academy, the Board schools, grammar and burgh; and Mrs. Wilson's Free School, endowed by a lady in the year 1818 for the education of 25 poor boys and the like number of girls. There are also Board schools at New Lanark, Nemphar, and Cartland village; and Roman Catholic schools in Lanark and at Smyllum, the latter an orphanage. Lanark has ever possessed considerable attractions for the visitor and the tourist from the beautiful undulating scenery and the romantic grounds of Bonnington, and Cartland Craggs, and the Falls of Clyde. These falls are three in number, viz.: Bonnington Falls, divided into two by a rocky islet; Corra Linn, where the water takes three distinct leaps, making a descent altogether of eighty-four feet; and Stonebyres Falls, about two miles below the town. An old bridge, arch shaped, of unknown origin, spans the Mouse near its entrance to the Clyde, from which a very fine view is obtained of Cartland Bridge, erected 1822; and of Cartland Craggs, already referred to. The neighbourhood of Lanark is adorned with many mansions of the nobility and gentry at B.-field, Baronald, Bonnington, Cleghorn, &c. At the Lee, the seat of Sir Simon Macdonald Lockhart, who is the principal landowner in the parish, is to be seen the curious stone called the "Lee Penny," which is said to have suggested to Sir Walter Scott the idea of his celebrated novel "The Talisman." Horse-races are held on an extensive and excellent course, about a mile and a half east of the town. There is an abundant supply of excellent water, brought from the Tinto range of hills, a distance of seven miles. In the vicinity is a handsome sheet of water, called Lanark Loch; its margins have been embanked and planted, and a footway, formed close by the water's edge, affords an attractive and delightful promenade, much frequented by the inhabitants. Adjacent to this loch is Lanark Moor, used as a golfing green and camping ground for the Lanark militia. The landward parish is included in the south (parliamentary) division, which sends one member to Parliament. The present representative is James H. C. Hozier, yr., Esq., of Mauldslee Castle, Lanarkshire. The weekly market day is Monday. Several years ago there were numerous fairs held in the course of the year; the few that are still observed are as follow: Fourth Monday in June, rough hogs; first Monday and Tuesday in August, lambs, and on the following Wednesday, horses; the third week in August, black-faced, cross and Cheviot lambs; first Monday in September and first Monday in October, both for sheep and lambs; and second Wednesday in April, plants. The area of the parish is 10,385 statute acres. The population of the parish in 1891 was 7,109; of the royal burgh, 5,537; and of the parliamentary burgh, 4,579. Valuation: Burgh, £13,986; parish, £21,976.

NEW LANARK is a very neat, regular, and well-built village, about 1 mile s. from Lanark, on the same side of the Clyde as that town. It was founded by Mr. Dale, in 1783, that enterprising gentleman having erected the first of the present range of cotton mills, and constructed a subterranean aqueduct, about one hundred yards in length, through the solid rock, by which means he brought the waters of the Clyde on to the sloping plain on which the mills and the village now stand. The late great (and by many considered mistaken) philanthropist, Owen, was long the principal proprietor of these extensive mills. The works were sold in the spring of 1881, and the new proprietors (the Lanark Spinning Co.) have been busily engaged in introducing the most improved machinery, and also in extending the works to double their former size. The population of the village was in 1881, 706.

KIRKFIELD BANK is a handsome village in the parish of Lesmahagow, situated on the left bank of the Clyde, about a mile and a half from Lanark. The principal occupation of the inhabitants is hand-loom weaving. The scenery in this neighbourhood is very romantic, and frequented by many visitors. There is an Established church and a board school in the village. Population in 1881, 968.

CARMICHAEL is an agricultural parish, about 4 miles s. of Lanark. The principal landowners are the Earl of Home, Sir Wyndham C. J. C. Anstruther, Bart., and Morris T. Carmichael, Esq. There is a church and Board school in the parish. Acreage of the parish, 11,314; population in 1881, 770, and in 1891, 693.
